COURT ENDS DEATH PENALTY BAN IN CASES OF MURDER

DEATH PENALTIES MAY RESUME SOON

Justices Agree to Decide Whether Punishment May Be Imposed on Rape Charge

By LESLEY OELSNER
Special to The New York Times
WASHINGTON, Oct. 4—The Supreme Court today to reconsider its July 1972 decision upholding the death penalty and lifted the stay that has kept the states from putting that punishment to effect.
The court also announced that they will decide in a case from Georgia, whether punishment may be imposed on persons convicted of rape.
The case came as the Court convened its 1976-1977 term, a year that is expected to be marked by further decisions on the Burger Court's trend toward the rights of defendants.

The court is to reconsider the July 1972 decision that ended the first executions in 30 years since 1967.
The States Affected
States to be affected are Georgia and Florida, whose death sentences were specifically upheld, and Arizona, in the July ruling. Arizona officials predict it will be months before anyone is executed for the NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund Inc. say that would begin in six to eight years.

Justices in other states with laws to those upheld in the Georgia case may be able to delay the start of a new wave of executions for a few more years. The court's decision in the Supreme Court in what will be a pattern in coming months. Two capital cases back to the Supreme Court today so the court could reconsider the death penalty statute in view of the court's decision.
The court's action, which had generally been expected but which was of great cause of its practical impact, coincided with no fanfare and no

Justice Statement
The court's decision came in a two-page opinion included on the 42d page of orders on nearly 1,000 cases filed at the start of the term.
Justice Brennan Jr. dissented from the court's decision on the Arkansas cases, but he vacated and not reconsidered the death sentences. Justice recorded a dissent to review the July 1972 decision, the Court agreed to be brought by two Arizona attorneys challenging the legal profession's suit against almost all advertisements.
The suit is being litigated in several courts and the country, with consumer lawyers contending that the suit infringes on the public's right. The Justice Department led an antitrust suit against the Bar Association challenging the suit. The Justice Department also agreed to review a number of cases on Page 36, Column 3.

Schmidt Acts to Bolster Coalition; Election Rival Seeks Bonn Allies

By CRAIG R. WHITNEY
Special to The New York Times

BONN, Oct. 4—Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, the head of the small Free Democratic Party, the Social Democrats' partner in the governing coalition, both men pledged that their alliance would continue for another four-year term beginning Dec. 14.
"We can and will continue our course without change after Dec. 14," Mr. Schmidt said at a closed session of his party's executive group in Bonn this afternoon.
But Mr. Schmidt's Christian Democratic rival, Helmut Kohl, began a series of political negotiations of his own that indicated that he would be a powerful force in Bonn and internationally in the coming years. Before he won his party's nomination a year ago, he was

Auto Workers and Ford Reported Near Accord on All Major Issues

By WILLIAM K. STEVENS
Special to The New York Times

DEARBORN, Mich., Oct. 4—The United Automobile Workers and the Ford Motor Company have agreed in principle on all the major issues that precipitated the union's 20-day-old strike against Ford, authoritative sources said today.
Meanwhile, in apparent anticipation of a settlement, the union summoned its National Ford Council to Detroit on Thursday. The council, composed of 150 delegates named by union locals at Ford plants and installations across the country, is the union's policy-making body.
"Hopefully, we will have a new agreement to present to the delegate body for their action," Leonard Woodcock, the union president, and Ken Bannan, the chief union negotiator, said in a statement. "If not," they said, "a report will take place on negotiations."

Alaska Oil Pipeline Is Expected to Open on Schedule

By WALLACE TURNER
Special to The New York Times

PRUDHOE BAY, Alaska—From the look of things, the Alaska oil pipeline appears likely to open about on schedule next summer.
An opening exactly on time, in July, 1977, is possible. Any significant delay would mean that service would begin a month or two later, in August or September.
The opening will be on or close to schedule despite a clamor over 3,955 welds that failed inspection, almost all of which have been repaired, and despite a report last month by investigators for the House Subcommittee on Energy and Power, who said that a year's delay was possible.
The tentative conclusions that differ with those of the House investigators emerge from interviews with officials monitoring and supervising the construction project and from an inspection of problem areas of the pipeline.
Most work will stop as soon as winter winds and bitter cold lash the construction site. These elements of the project will remain.

U.S. AIDES SEE SHIFT IN SOVIET ATOM BID

By BERNARD GWERTZMAN
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Oct. 4—Senior United States officials said today that they were giving serious attention to a new, unexpected Soviet proposal that could open the way to negotiations for a total ban on underground nuclear explosions.
The new proposal, made by Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko in a memorandum filed at the United Nations last week, said the Soviet Union was ready to discuss on-site inspection to insure that a treaty prohibiting all underground nuclear weapons tests was being complied with.
This was the first time since the early 1950's that the Russians have agreed in principle to American insistence that there could be no total ban without adequate verification. On-site inspection is needed, the United States contends, to distinguish between earthquakes and suspected clandestine testing.
United States officials said they were intrigued by the apparent shift in position.

4 Hospitals Facing Intern Strike Today

By ROBERT McG. THOMAS JR.

A group of interns and residents, demanding reinstatement as bargaining agent for hospital staff physicians, pressed forward with plans for a strike against four voluntary hospitals at 7 A.M. today despite last-minute defections by the resident staff at six other voluntary institutions.
As hospital administrators made plans to replace interns and residents with department heads and attending physicians, Dr. Jay F. Dobkin, president of the Committee of Interns and Residents, said last night that local house staffs would strike Flower and Fifth Avenue Hospital and the Arthur C. Logan Memorial Hospital in Manhattan, Brookdale Hospital in Brooklyn, and Albert Ein-

BUTZ QUILTS UNDER FIRE AMID RISING PROTESTS ABOUT RACIST REMARK

Offers an Apology for 'Gross Indiscretion'—Ford Calls Him 'Decent and Good' Friend

By WILLIAM ROBBINS
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Oct. 4—Earl L. Butz resigned as Secretary of Agriculture today with an apology for the "gross indiscretion" of a racist remark that had generated a growing clamor and threatened to damage President Ford's election campaign.
A half hour later, the President told reporters that he was accepting the resignation of "this decent and good man."
"This has been one of the saddest decisions of my Presidency," Mr. Ford said, describing Mr. Butz as "a close personal friend."
Jimmy Carter, Mr. Ford's Democratic opponent, said that the President had only reacted to political pressure. "The way this whole embarrassing and disgusting episode was handled by President Ford shows a continuation of lack of leadership," he said.

Aide to Be Acting Secretary
Under law, according to the authorities at the Agriculture Department, Under Secretary John A. Knebel will become acting Secretary tomorrow when he returns to Washington from a trip.
After a weekend of tension and streams of protests, Mr. Butz met at noon today with Mr. Ford at the White House. He emerged from the meeting, his manner strained and his eyes red-rimmed and watery, to read his final statement in a lousy voice.
"This is the price I pay for a gross indiscretion in a private conversation," he said. "The use of a bad racial connotation in no way reflects my real attitude. By taking this action I hope to remove even the appearance of racism as an issue in the Ford campaign."
Despite a public apology from Mr. Butz and a "severe reprimand" of him by Mr. Ford, the weekend was filled with demands for the Secretary's dismissal or resignation.

Regardless of his personal feelings, Mr. Ford faced a political problem in making the decision. He was relying heavily on Mr. Butz to help win the Midwestern farm vote.
The Secretary had been campaigning strenuously since early September and 14 more days of political appearances were already scheduled for him by the President Ford Committee.
The resignation today followed the disclosure last Friday that Mr. Butz was the source of a remark that described blacks as "coloreds" who wanted only three things in life—satisfying sex, loose shoes and a warm place for bodily functions—wishes that were listed by Mr. Butz in obscene and scatological terms.
The remark was first reported by John W. Dean 3d in Rolling Stone magazine, but was not attributed to a particular individual. New Times magazine subsequently identified Mr. Butz as the source.
"Good for the Country"
Reactions to the President's acceptance of the resignation were immediate.
The resignation was "good for the country," the President and the Republican Party, said Senator Edward W. Brooke, Republican of Massachusetts, who had been the first to demand that Mr. Butz resign. Mr. Brooke is the only black member of the Senate.
Senator Robert J. Dole of Kansas, the President's running mate, called Mr. Ford "a man of decency and integrity," and said that he had "made the right decision."
Senator Jacob K. Javits, Republican of New York, said that he was "gratified

$83.6 Million Yonkers Bond Sale Ends a Year of Fiscal Uncertainty

By JAMES FERON
Special to The New York Times

YONKERS, Oct. 4—Yonkers ended a year of fiscal uncertainty today with the announcement that it had sold $83.6 million in short-term and long-term bonds.
A jubilant City Manager, Vincent Castaldo, said, "The Little Apple has pulled out."
He said that a bond sale contract would be signed tomorrow with Smith Barney, Harris Upham and Company, underwriters representing an investment syndicate.
Mr. Castaldo, who became Yonkers' fourth City Manager in two years last February, said the interest rates, ranging from 6 percent to 8.75 percent for securities maturing over a span of 2 to 20 years, "are much lower than we anticipated."
However, the sale of the fiscal package will not end the city's troubles. Budget cutbacks, also mandated by the state have led to layoffs of employees, school closings and drastic changes in city operations. The Yonkers police were reported today to be preparing protest action similar to those by the New York City police against salary and schedule changes.
Yonkers, the state's fourth largest city, had approached default several times since last November. It avoided bankruptcy.

Abdul Khan is one of 30,000 men who pedal rickshaws around Dacca for five cents a mile. At 21, he has been a rickshaw wallah for last five years.

Ricksha-Wallahs in Bangladesh: Torturous Life at 5 Cents a Mile

By WILLIAM BORDERS
Special to The New York Times

DACCA, Bangladesh, Sept. 28—Abdul Khan was exhausted, as he is a good part of the time.

"It's toward the end of the day, when my legs begin to hurt, that it gets to me," he explained with a weary sigh as he parked his bicycle ricksha in a patch of cool, welcome shade and mopped his forehead with an old yellow towel. "But then I look at others around me, and I realize I'm not badly off."

Mr. Khan is one of 30,000 men estimated to earn their living pedaling passengers around this steamy city for about 5 cents a mile. Their three-wheeled vehicles, though properly known as pedicabs, are universally called rickshas, and the drivers are called ricksha-wallahs, with the addition of the Hindi suffix "wallah," meaning agent, doer or operator.

Opposition Is Increasing

Although they are ubiquitous in this part of the world, the ricksha-wallahs are increasingly the focus of controversy as social consciousness spreads across Asia.

"There's more and more a feeling that it's inhuman to have one man pulling another man as if he were a beast of burden," said Estamul Haq, the principal information officer of the Bangladesh government. "We really want to get rid of them and move to motorized taxis, but I'm afraid it will take a long, long time."

In a place where gasoline costs $1.40 a gallon, men are often used as beasts of burden. Construction sites in Pakistan's new capital, Islamabad, are crisscrossed with long lines of workers carrying flat trays of sand on their heads, and a common sight in any south Asian city is half a dozen men heaving a huge desk or cupboard on their heads through blocks and blocks of traffic.

Americans and other Western visitors are often squeamish about riding in rickshas, especially the kind found in places like Calcutta, where the ricksha-wallah, with no cycle to operate, just grabs onto the vehicle and pulls, his bare feet slapping on the pavement. But a Dacca merchant who takes a ricksha to work every day calls such scruples "hypersensitive," and reasons this way:

"Of course it's hard work for the men on the pedals, but they get well paid for it, and it's better to earn an honest living that way than to be hungry, like so many in this country."

In a recent study published by the Bangladesh Medical Research Council, two physiologists here found, to no one's surprise, that ricksha pedalers are among the hardest-working physical laborers, using more than seven calories a minute.

But the study also found that because they earned about $30 a month, more than most skilled laborers, they were able to buy enough food to keep themselves going. Their mean caloric intake was 3,100 calories a day, very high for this hungry land.

Long-Range Effects Unknown

"They're not downtrodden at all," said Dr. Mujibur Rahman, one of the authors of the study. "Of course, we don't know about the long-range effects of such labor. You'll notice they're all rather young."

Mr. Khan, who has been pedaling a ricksha around Dacca for five years, is 21. Like most of the men in his trade he has a lean, hard body that is soaked with sweat dozens of times a day. He wears a T-shirt and proted lungi, the sarong-type wraparound favored by Bengali men.

Mr. Khan rents his vehicle from a man who owns 12 of them. The rent is about a dollar a day, which on a good day leaves him about $1.25 for himself. "Of course, it would be better if I owned the ricksha myself," he said, speaking in Bengali. But that could cost as much as $200, and so "I doubt if I will ever save enough," he said.

Socialist Leader in India Appears,
In Court, Handcuffed but Defiant

Special to The New York Times

NEW DELHI, Oct. 4—George Fernandes, who is one of Prime Minister Indira Gandhi's principal opponents, stood chained and handcuffed in a criminal court here today and vowed to keep on the fight against her Government.

"Even without us, our movement will not cease until Mrs. Gandhi is out," said Mr. Fernandes, a labor union leader, as he and 21 others were arraigned on charges of having conspired to terrorize the country and to overthrow the Government. Then he and the other defendants suddenly raised their hands in the air, and jangled the heavy chains by which each of them was attached to a policeman, as Mr. Fernandes read from a prepared statement: "The chains we bear before you today are symbols of the entire nation which has been chained and fettered by dictatorship, a symbol of the infamy that has been perpetrated on our country."

Mr. Fernandes, the chairman of the Socialist Party of India, and former president of the All-India Railwaymen's Federation, was arrested June 19. He had spent nearly a year as a fugitive, covertly organizing resistance to the stern new political order that Prime Minister Gandhi imposed upon India in June 1975.

Among his co-defendants, facing charges that could bring sentences of life imprisonment, are Viren J. Shah, an industrialist and member of the upper house of Parliament from Bombay, C.G.K. Reddy, a senior management consultant to The Hindu, a leading daily newspaper, and two journalists. This was one of the few times since the suspension of civil liberties 15 months ago that prominent opponents of the Government had been charged with specific and detailed crimes. Most of the thousands of political prisoners in India are being held without formal charges, under the wide-ranging Maintenance of Internal Security Act.

The defendants all seemed healthy and in reasonably good spirits as they were led into the small, dimly lit magistrates' court today by several dozen unarmed policemen. Although a few guards sat near the door with rifles, the security precautions were very relaxed, and most of the courthouse scene was routine, with lawyers sipping milky tea at their outdoor offices—little typewriter tables set up in a vast open courtyard—as they argued with one another about fine points of law, consulted with clerics, or typed appeals and affidavits.

For about an hour, first during a break in the proceedings and then while various petitions were being put before Judge Mohammed Shamin, the 22 prisoners chatted amiably with one another, with visitors, and with half a dozen foreign reporters. They complained bitterly about the handcuffs, protesting that they were being treated as criminals rather than political prisoners.

"I've been in solitary confinement, incommunicado, with lights shining on me day and night," said the 46-year-old labor leader. "And I have only been given one letter from my wife." Mr. Fernandes's wife, Leila, left India after he went underground.

The 16-page charge sheet, the equivalent of an indictment, that was presented today to the defendants portrays Mr. Fernandes as leader of a conspiracy to obtain explosives and set them in railway stations, bridges and train tracks and other public places, "with the ultimate objective of overthrowing the established government."

As it details the charges, the indictment paints a picture of Mr. Fernandes dashing around the country, often only one step ahead of the police, using aliases, disguises and codes as he sought support for his antigovernment campaign. The defendants did not enter pleas today, and the judge scheduled the next hearing in the case for Oct. 12.

IN SPAIN KILLING BASQUE

General Member of Key Aid With 3 Guards—Session Is Called

Special to The New York Times

Basque separatist group members said authorities had arrested a group of left-wing fringe group members for the killings, which were held in a shop in San Sebastián.

was severely wounded in the head and body. One news report from San Sebastián said that four or five gunmen had run to a nearby street intersection, where they climbed into a white Simca and fled. The car was reportedly recovered by the police, suggesting that the gunmen had transferred to another vehicle.

Police Surveillance Tightened
Another version said that only one gunman had fired at the two cars and then had run to join the other conspirators in the Simca.

The police in Guipúzcoa Province, which borders on France, were said to have tightened surveillance of cars traveling north and to have instituted checks of buses, trains and ships to prevent the killers from fleeing the country.

The murdered man, a native of the Basque town of Santurce, fought as a partisan of the Carlist Monarchist cause alongside the forces of Generalissimo Franco in the Spanish Civil War. A lawyer, he rose through the basic institutions of postwar Spain, finally reaching the Parliament and the Council of the Realm as a representative of local administration.

Recently, Mr. Araluce had begun to carve out something of a reputation as a liberal in the Council of the Realm—an institution not known for radical political thinking in the restive Basque country, eager for a degree of political autonomy, he had become a cautious advocate of regional rights.

There was no immediate reaction to the slaying from the four Basque provinces, which a week ago were subjected to an impressive general strike set off partly by the police killing of a young demonstrator in the border town of Fuenterrabia.

In April, E.T.A. commandos murdered a kidnapped Basque industrialist, Angel Berazandi Urbe, after his family failed to furnish a $3 million ransom. The murder generated an anti-E.T.A. backlash in much of the Basque country.

British and U.S. Envoys Meet Rhodesia's Premier

By HENRY KAMM
SALISBURY, Rhodesia, Oct. 4—Assistant Secretary of State William E. Schaufele Jr. and Edward Rowlands, Minister of State at the British Foreign Office, conferred here today with Prime Minister Ian D. Smith on arrangements for the planned conference on the formation of an interim biracial government for the transition to black majority rule.

The envoys arrived here from Pretoria, South Africa, after several days of discussions in interested African countries, and returned there tonight. An informed source suggested that the day of talks had been encouraging but failed to provide any hint of what encouraged them. He balanced this optimism by pointing out that success could not be guaranteed. While they met behind closed doors with Mr. Smith, and later with representatives of various black and white Rhodesian groupings, a problem emerged that is not within their scope and that endangers the future of the plan mediated by Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger.

The problem is the deep division among the black nationalist factions and their inability so far to designate those who would negotiate with Mr. Smith under British chairmanship on the functions and composition of the interim government.

Black Meeting Postponed
Joshua Nkomo, leader of one faction of the divided African National Council, announced in an angry and rambling news conference today that Bishop Abel Muzorewa, leader of the other faction, had postponed a meeting they had agreed to hold today in order to achieve a united front for the negotiations.

Mr. Nkomo said he could not wait the "two or three days" that the Bishop had proposed and was leaving tomorrow for Zambia, Mozambique and, it appeared, Tanzania, to report to the leaders of those countries and to meet with Rhodesian nationalist leaders who operate from beyond this country's borders.

While not ruling out a meeting with Bishop Muzorewa in the future, Mr. Nkomo accused the other nationalist leader of never having engaged in the war that he said brought the white minority regime to agree to yield. "He happens not to control any guerrilla movement," he said of the Bishop.

Twice Mr. Nkomo testily dismissed Bishop Muzorewa's enthusiastic reception on his return yesterday from 14 months of self-exile as "open-Mercedes politics," a reference to the open-top car that drove the Bishop through cheering crowds yesterday from the airport.

Mr. Nkomo reacted angrily to the Bishop's accusation yesterday that Mr. Nkomo was America's choice to head the government under majority rule. "I am not engaging in nonsense talking," he said.

Perhaps in rebuttal, Mr. Nkomo emphasized the refusal by the presidents of five African states to accept Mr. Smith's announced plan for forming the interim government.

The principal African objection to the plan negotiated by Mr. Kissinger, Prime Minister John Vorster of South Africa and Mr. Smith is the provision entrusting to whites the defense and law and order portfolios in the black-majority interim government.

Portugal's Parties Are Preparing For Important Municipal Elections

By MARVINE HOWE
Special to The New York Times

LISBON, Oct. 4—Portugal's main political parties have begun to stake out positions for crucial municipal elections that are set for December 12.

Prime Minister Mário Soares, a Socialist, announced today that he and other members of his Government would tour regional capitals every weekend to study local problems.

Continuance of the two-month-old Socialist Government does not necessarily depend on the outcome of the local elections, but Prime Minister Soares has said he would "respect the decision of the people." The Socialists emerged in front in the legislative elections held last April, getting 35 percent of the vote, and they hope to do better next time. They are faced with sharpened opposition, however, on both the right and the left.

The Socialists' chief rivals, the liberal Popular Democrats, declared today that they were changing their party's name to the Social Democratic Party in what is plainly a bid to win over some of the Socialist voters.

Conservatives Plan Challenge to Soares
The leaders of the conservative Christian Democratic Party, meeting over the weekend, announced that they would challenge the Government frontally on tax increases and the agrarian reform law when the National Assembly reconvenes this week.

The main revolutionary leftist organization, which calls itself the Movement for Popular Unity, held its first national meeting during the weekend to work out electoral strategy. The Movement for Popular Unity grew out of the groups that supported the populist candidate, Maj. Otelo Saraiva de Carvalho, in the presidential election last June. "Otelo," as he is generally called, made a surprisingly strong showing, coming in second with 16.54 percent of the vote. Gen. Antonio Ramalho Eanes, who had the support of the three largest parties, won with 61.54 percent.

Party's Problems Acknowledged
Major Saraiva de Carvalho addressed his supporters last night, defying a Government order that he refrain from political activity because of his role in an abortive leftist coup attempt last Nov. 25. Before an enthusiastic audience consisting mainly of students, he declared that the Movement for Popular Unity was prepared to propose a revolutionary "grass-roots alternative" to the present "bourgeois" Socialist Government.

He acknowledged that the movement was experiencing growing pains because of a lack of money and of internal divisions. And while denouncing bourgeois democracy, he said that the movement had applied for legal status so that it could take part in the December elections.

The conservative Christian Democrats, known as the Centrists, presented to the President and the Prime Minister bids calling for suspension of the new tax laws and a halt in land expropriations until the issues could be debated in the National Assembly.

Africa Rebels Consider Cuba Arms

By KATHLEEN TELTSCH
Special to The New York Times

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y., Oct. 4—The principal black nationalist movement that is fighting for South-West African independence is "shopping" for weapons in Cuba, according to the organization's spokesman here.

But no attempt is being made to get the aid of Cuban troops, now in Angola. The Sen-Guifaba, the representative of the South-West African People's Organization, said.

He said that both anti-aircraft artillery and planes were needed by his organization to combat what he described as an accelerated military involvement by South Africa in the territory, which it holds in defiance of United Nations resolutions that give up this "illegal control."

Sam Nujoma, the organization's leader, who is reported to be in Havana, has said several times in recent weeks that his movement needs more sophisticated weapons to combat stepped-up South African intervention in the territory, which black African nationalists call Namibia. He has charged that South African authorities are using the territory as a springboard for attacks on Angola and Zambia.

Pretoria Denies Training Angolans
PRETORIA, South Africa, Oct. 4 (Reuters)—Defense headquarters tonight denied claims made by the South-West African People's Organization that South African forces were training guerrillas of the Western-backed Angolan nationalist movement, the National Union for the Total Independence of Angola.

A NEW DELHI NEWSPAPER PADELOCKED BY THE POLICE

NEW DELHI, Oct. 4 (AP)—Prime Minister Indira Gandhi's Government, locked in a battle with India's largest newspaper chain, sent armed policemen to the offices of the Indian Express today and padlocked its presses.

The padlocking came just two days after the Express got a court order to restore its electricity after a two-day blackout that the Express charged was part of a Government campaign against one of India's last independent voices.

There was virtually no chance that the Tuesday New Delhi edition of 80,000 copies could be published, though the Express publishing centers in seven other cities across India would go to press on schedule, officials said.

Officials of the federally controlled Delhi Municipal Corporation told the newspaper's management that the action was prompted by a property tax debt of some $100,000, officials of the paper said.

TO OFFER PLAN NUCLEAR EXPORT

Program Expected to Impose Controls on Equipment Providing Weapons-Making Potential

DAVID BURNHAM
Staff Writer of The New York Times
WASHINGTON, Oct. 4—President Ford will propose within the next few days to tighten control of the export of certain kinds of nuclear equipment and material that can be used to make atomic bombs. In part, the plan appears in response to criticism by environmentalists, members of Congress and other Democrats. The Democratic candidate for the United States has failed to gain support with the spread of nuclear energy.

The Administration sources said the program will be announced next week and will include a suspension of a halt in United States exports of plutonium—the raw material for atomic bombs—as a supplier of fuel until this use has been determined to have value.

The program, costing at least $100 million, will determine whether plutonium can be used safely and economically as a fuel for the uranium that has been used in conventional power reactors. The United States has agreed to limit the export of uranium reactor fuel that violates agreement on plutonium.

Mr. Spath, a lawyer with the office of the Natural Resources Council, an environmental group, concentrated his criticism on the Administration's plan to initiate a demonstration project to mine the uses of plutonium. He said the Ford Administration is using the concern about the spread of weapons to justify a program of assistance to the plutonium industry.

ARABS ON WEST BANK QUESTION TREATMENT

Clashes Increase Concern About Evenhandedness of Israelis
in Occupied Territory

Special to The New York Times

HOLHOU, Israeli-Occupied West Bank, Oct. 4—In the wake of the latest round of clashes between Arabs and Israelis in tense West Bank towns, Arab officials are asking an old question with renewed vigor: Does the occupying Israeli Government render the same treatment to Arabs as to Jews?

The question is particularly on the minds of many of the 11,000 residents of this grape-growing village today because of an incident yesterday in which seven young Arabs were shot and wounded, allegedly by a Jewish civilian wearing a skullcap and riding with some companions in a pickup truck.

The incident was connected to rioting yesterday in nearby Hebron between Arab youths and Israeli security forces. The rioting occurred after Moslems and Jews accused one another of desecrating and vandalizing Moslem and Jewish artifacts at a shrine revered by both faiths.

The acts of vandalism—it is still not clear who initiated them, Jews or Arabs—triggered demonstrations and stone-throwing protests to a number of West Bank towns that continued sporadically today in Tulkarm, Jenin, Ramallah and Nablus, where a curfew was ordered. Hebron was quiet today under a curfew ordered there yesterday.

Only Jews Allowed at Tomb

Only Jews, many from the controversial Israeli settlement of Qiryat Arba near Hebron, were permitted to worship today at the Tomb of the Patriarchs, a shrine sacred to Moslems and Jews. Defense Minister Shimon Peres had said yesterday that both Moslems and Jews would be allowed to pray at the tomb today.

Many of the residents of Qiryat Arba belong to an ultranationalist Jewish sect called Gush Emunim, which claims all areas of what they believe to be the ancient Jewish homeland. This includes parts of Moslem Arab Hebron.

The mayor of Halhoul, Mohammed Hassan Milhen, an English teacher, met with village officials and reporters in his office today. He and others said they suspected that the Arab youths had been shot by residents of Qiryat Arba, although they admitted they could not prove it.

Mayor Milhen said he had contacted other West Bank mayors and had asked them to press Israeli occupation authorities for a thorough investigation. Israeli officials, Mr. Milhen said, "keep telling us they are against such deeds."

"Let us see words put into action to see if they are true about it," he said.

Local military officials declined to comment on whether an investigation was under way. The chief Israeli defense spokesman, Brig. Gen. Yoel Ben Porat, reached by telephone, said he had been unaware of the shootings but that any shootings in the country would be investigated. Part of the unresponsiveness of the military was due to a cessation of activity in Israel because of the holy day of Yom Kippur.

Israeli Governor Is Praised

Mayor Fahad Kawasme of Hebron said in an interview that the Israeli military governor for the Hebron area, Lieut. Col. Yehoshua Ben Shahal, was "a gentleman, a good man who tries to keep peace."

In Mr. Kawasme's view, the problem of equal treatment rests largely with the court system. Members of Gush Emunim, many of whom walk about armed, have demonstrated in an Arab market quarter of Hebron for about three months, "making the population nervous with their guns and their knives," Mr. Kawasme said. He referred to members of the sect as "men who are over the law," echoing remarks by some Israelis who are critical of their actions.

"The punishment is not the same for the Arabs and the Jews," Mr. Kawasme asserted. He referred to the practice of the Gush Emunim sect of dancing during their demonstrations near an abandoned Jewish hospital to the Arab quarter. In court, the mayor said, a member of the sect "will say 'I was dancing' and the judge says: 'Dancing is not a crime.'"

"What they don't know is they are dancing on our feelings," the mayor said. He and others said they felt that the Jewish settlers of Qiryat Arba got little more than reprimands for violations of local ordinances because arrests would have political repercussions in the fragile alignment of the Israeli Government's ruling Labor bloc.

Pravda Accuses Japan of Delay In Resolving the MIG-25 Affair

MOSCOW, Oct. 4 (Reuters)—Moscow today condemned Japanese delays in returning a top-secret MIG-25 jet fighter that was flown to Japan a month ago by a defecting Soviet Air Force pilot.

An article in the Communist Party newspaper Pravda dismissed official Japanese statements on the dispute as intended for simpletons.

The newspaper accused those responsible for Tokyo's foreign policy of dragging out the dispute artificially and "whitewashing the 'provocative actions' of Japanese and American experts who are examining the plane.

TOKYO, Oct. 4 (AP)—The Soviet Union has seized two more Japanese fishing boats near the southern Kuril Islands. They would be the sixth and seventh boats reported seized since Sept. 6, when a Soviet pilot landed the MIG-25 in Japan.

Sudan Closes Off Area in South Reporting Unidentified Disease

KHARTOUM, the Sudan, Oct. 4 (AP)—Sudanese authorities have barred movement into the southern Sudan and closed off the Maridi area in western Equatoria Province because of a mysterious contagious disease in the area.

The World Health Organization office in Nairobi, Kenya, said yesterday that 80 persons had died near Juba, in the southern Sudan. But the Sudanese announcement said there were 12 victims.

Maj. Khalid Hassan Abas, the Health Minister, said the disease broke out in July in the southern Sudan, vanished in August, then reappeared in September. The victims included a doctor and some nurses who had been treating the sick, Major Abas said.

2 Key Trudeau Programs Opposed By Western Provinces in Canada

By ROBERT TRUMBULL
Special to The New York Times

WINNIPEG, Manitoba, Oct. 4—Two of Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau's key programs have been jolted by opposition from the West, where suspicion of Ottawa is a political tradition.

Premier Edward Schreyer of Manitoba threatened last week to replace the controversial federal system of wage and price controls in his agricultural province with an anti-inflation plan of his own. As a result, Mr. Trudeau promised to review the working of the controls. The incident followed a rollback in wage increases in Manitoba by order of the federal control board.

Similarly, objections by Premier Peter Lougheed of Alberta, which produces most of Canada's oil, were a cardinal factor yesterday in stalling provincial approval of Mr. Trudeau's plan to substitute Canadian legislation for the act of the British Parliament that now serves as the Constitution.

Mr. Lougheed declined to support the change unless it was accompanied by a law giving each province a veto over any proposed amendment. Such a law would protect present provincial ownership of natural resources that "keeps Alberta wealthy."

Quebec Seeks Cultural Rights
Premier Robert Bourassa of Quebec objected to the constitutional change unless the move was accompanied by legislation enhancing provincial control over areas affecting cultural affairs, such as immigration and communications, an issue of importance in French-speaking Quebec.

Unable to reach agreement on a formula, the 10 premiers ended a conference on the question in Toronto with a proposal that they hold another meeting later, with Mr. Trudeau participating. The Prime Minister agreed, but said that he did not see how his presence would help if the premiers were unable to solve the issue among themselves.

The disputes are the latest manifestations of hostility to Mr. Trudeau in the western provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia, all of which have rejected the Prime Minister's Liberal Party in both provincial and federal elections.

Liberal Party Not a Factor

Premier Schreyer in Manitoba and Premier Allan Blakeney of Saskatchewan came to power in victories by the New Democratic Party, a Socialist group. Alberta, ruled by a Progressive Conservative Party government under Mr. Lougheed, is the home province of the party's national leader, Joseph Clark. Voters in British Columbia recently turned out the New Democratic Party to bring back the more conservative Social Credit Party.

In the federal parliament, Mr. Trudeau's Liberal Party claims only five of the 22 members from Manitoba and Saskatchewan and eight of 23 from British Columbia, while all 19 members from Alberta belong to the Progressive Conservative Party.

"We have a long list of complaints against Ottawa," Premier Lougheed of Alberta told a recent visitor, alluding to federal tax policies considered harmful to the Alberta oil industry, freight rates that are said to penalize western shippers, and a host of other grievances.

Barshai, Noted Soviet Conductor, Is Seeking to Emigrate to Israel

By DAVID K. SHIFLER
Special to The New York Times

MOSCOW, Oct. 4—Rudolf Barshai, who created and now conducts the Soviet Union's most prominent chamber orchestra, has applied for emigration to Israel, according to sources in music circles. Last night he gave what may have been his final concert in Moscow.

His departure, at the peak of his career, would lengthen a growing list of musicians who have left the Soviet Union in recent months. Among them are Rostislav Dubinsky, a violinist with the Borodino Quartet, and Yuli Turovsky, who played cello in Mr. Barshai's group, the Moscow Chamber Orchestra.

The 52-year-old conductor, who founded the orchestra 20 years ago, traveled widely on concert tours in the United States, Western Europe, Australia and elsewhere until a year ago, when he requested permission from the Ministry of Culture to take a sabbatical abroad.

Travel Privileges Denied

According to sources familiar with the case, his letter was not answered and he was denied the right to accompany the orchestra on foreign tours. No explanation was given to the conductor, one musician said, but officials invented cover stories for foreign sponsoring organizations: that he did not want to go, that he was sick, that he was busy with personal affairs. A source said several organizers in France and Britain refused to take the orchestra without him.

About six weeks ago, he applied for permission to emigrate to Israel, where his son is understood to have lived for several years. So far no decision has been announced, but musicians have generally been allowed to leave more readily than those in certain other professions, especially the sciences.

Mr. Barshai is the most distinguished musician to seek emigration since Mstislav Rostropovich, the cellist, left for a sabbatical in France in 1974 and then announced that he would not return to the Soviet Union until artistic freedom was restored.

Mr. Barshai's concerts have often been gathering places for some of the luminaries of Soviet life. Even last night, after rumors of his visa application had pervaded intellectual circles, his all-Bach program was attended by Yuri Zhukov, the political commentator for the Communist Party newspaper Pravda; Arkady Raikin, the comedian; high-ranking diplomats and others.

The orchestra is leaving next Sunday without its conductor for a tour of Austria and West Germany. It will return in six weeks. By then, Mr. Barshai may be gone. Or he may be out of a job. If he is still here and allowed to work, one musician said, he is believed ready to continue with the orchestra.

Despite that lingering uncertainty, the concert last night in the Great Hall of the Tchaikovsky Conservatory had the feeling of a testimonial. At the very end, when Mr. Barshai conducted his last encore, Bach's "Air For G String," he held and held and held the final note as if he just did not want to let go.

Uruguay's Military Leaders Angry Over Congressional Cutoff on Aid for Arms

 of the New York Times
 Uruguay, Sept. 29—Uruguay's military leaders have reacted angrily to the recent ban by the United States Congress on further aid to the country, which they say is a systematic violation of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1977 by a Senate conference committee.

of Manhattar, to protest what he described as the Uruguayan violation of human rights in carrying out antisubversive policies.

The suspension of United States military aid ends a program that involved about $3 million in arms credits and financing of training for Uruguayan officers and enlisted men in specialized schools at United States military installations.

Accused of Torture and Killings
 Uruguay's military has been accused by many exiles of arbitrary arrests, torture, killing of prisoners and disregard for due process of law in its fight on revolutionary subversion.

This has been directed mainly against the Tupamaro guerrillas, about 5,000 activists, who since 1964 have been responsible for violence against Uruguay's elec-ed governments in an attempt to establish a Cuban-style regime here. But the anti-subversion campaign has also been extended to Communist, groups in the left-wing Board Front coalition that ran for office in 1972, and more recently all dissident political groups. More than 2,000 people are now in jail for political reasons.

For the 25,000-member armed forces in this country of three million people, the United States cutoff means that arms will now have to be purchased in the United States or obtained somewhere else, as will training.

The Uruguayan Government is headed by a civilian President, Aparicio Mendez, who is chosen by the Council of State, but run by the armed forces commander since 1973. The Government is militantly anti-Communist and looks for support to other military regimes in this region, such as those of Chile, Paraguay, Argentina and Brazil.

An Uruguayan officer said: "The main effect of the decision by politicized elements in your Congress who are engaged in playing the Communist game will be that we will all stand closer together." This was an allusion to many signs of closer military, intelligence and diplomatic cooperation between right-wing military governments in Latin America.

The United States Congressional action meant an end to the military advisory groups that have been working with the Uruguayan Army, Air Force and Navy since 1950. The three defense attaches are due to remain, and a new three-man group, attached to the United States Ambassador, Ernest Siracusa, is to provide technical assistance for Uruguayan arms purchases in the United States.

The Uruguayan military believes that its success in smashing the Tupamaros and restoring public security and economic order should gain them the gratitude of the United States.

United States economic aid to Uruguay, based on three loans totaling $11 million for agricultural development, is not affected by the military aid ban. But the United States aid mission is not requesting any additional funds for the coming fiscal year.

Indochina Refugees Need Help When at Sea, U.N. Official Says

Special to The New York Times
 GENEVA, Oct. 4—The United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees called attention today to the plight of those he termed the "boat people," the Vietnamese and other Indochinese refugees who are fleeing their homeland by sea to escape Communist rule.

Prince Sudraddin Aga Khan told the 31-member Executive Committee for the United Nations refugee program that many refugees were fleeing in fragile craft and needed assistance once they reached the high seas.

The High Commissioner drew attention to the international rules requiring ships masters to aid vessels in distress "in a spirit of human solidarity." The Prince did not expand, but aides pointed out that Indochinese refugees have reported that their distress signals had been ignored by passing ships.

Maine Municipalities in Turmoil Over Land Suit Filed by Indians

MILLINOCKET, Me., Oct. 4—Michael T. Lachance, the Town Manager of Millinocket, expects a "cash settlement" of an old suit filed by Maine Indians seeking two-thirds of the land in the state.

Mr. Lachance was referring to the lawsuit filed in 1972 in which the Penobscot and Passamaquoddy Indians asked $300 million in damages from the state. The Indians said their lands had been unjustly taken from them. Their attorney, Thomas Tureen, said the suit had been filed to prevent the statute of limitations for such claims from running out.

Because of the suit, a scheduled $30 million sale of bonds by the Municipal Bond Bank was delayed.

A possibility that has been discussed for four years, however, is that instead of just seeking a cash settlement, the Indians will move to expand the suit to include a call for a return of the land.

Conference Is Set

A conference of lawyers in the case is scheduled for tomorrow in the Federal District Court in Bangor. Mr. Tureen said any amendments to the suit would be discussed then.

Mr. Lachance said that many Maine municipalities "are going to be detrimentally affected" by the suit. The suits have also forced the bond bank to delay borrowing $27 million in bonds for cities, towns, schools and hospitals and a delay in the sale of $3.4 million worth of notes in Ellsworth.

Mr. Lachance said that Maine would lose two-thirds of its tax base if the Indians were granted the state land. He added:

"For instance, you take Millinocket, it is surrounded by the very land on both sides of water the Indians are describing as their property. If they are successful, we no longer will exist. We are surrounded by the Penobscot River, and their suit claims all the land on the east and west banks of the Penobscot—which includes Millinocket."

Mr. Lachance said last week that his city had "treated the 1972 filing of the $300 million suit by the Indians with too much levity, not giving enough consideration to it. This situation has all the ramifications of tying up most of northern Maine's money."

'Too Much Levity' Charged

Gov. James B. Longley has met with members of Maine's Congressional delegation in Washington to appeal for Congressional action to help resolve the dispute.

Senators Edmund S. Muskie and William D. Hathaway, Democrats, and Representatives William Coheo and David Emery, Republicans, have introduced identical legislation that opposes the return of the aboriginal land claimed by the tribes. The legislation also would restrict to a cash payment any judicial award that may be made when the 95th Congress convenes in January.

Governor Longley said that the state must make certain that Indians have a right to act in court, but he added: "We must not allow any suit by any group of individuals to bring government to its knees or halt its necessary functions prior to the suit being decided on its merits in the court."

Captain Pleads in Fishing Case

PORTLAND, Ore., Oct. 4 (UPI)—Capt. Hristo Popov of the Bulgarian stern trawler Ofelia pleaded not guilty today to a criminal charge of fishing inside the United States 12-mile limit, an offense which could send him to jail as well as result in confiscation of his vessel. United States Magistrate George Juba said he would set a coadjury trial for later this week. The 274-foot Ofelia was seized Sept. 26 for allegedly fishing 11.4 miles off the Oregon coast.

THIS YEAR, INDEPENDENCE DAY FALLS ON OCTOBER 26

Pardon the parody, but we thought it was a better way of getting your attention than by starting a war to get our independence.

On October 26, our Xhosa nation celebrates a peaceful evolution to total independence from South Africa. We'll have full recognition for our language and our culture. We'll also have our own part of Southern Africa — Transkei, a country the size of Switzerland in which we have lived and prospered for over 300 years.

Our independence evolution started back in 1951 and led to self-government through our elected Legislative Assembly in 1963. Since then we have been developing our own judicial system, civil service, army and police force. And a free society. And so October 26 sees the birth of a beautiful new country, among those with the brightest economic prospects in Africa.

AN OIL PIPELINE ON SCHEDULE

The gas will fuel the pumps, hydrostatic pressure testing of the Brooks Range on the completion of pumping stations and of the shipping terminal, where tankers will take oil through the pipeline. The estimate is that the 800-mile project will cost $7.7 billion. Major oil companies that own the rich Prudhoe Bay field own the pipeline service company. When service begins, the oil also will have invested about $1 billion in a network of 137 production facilities and the equipment to remove the oil from the field. They will also have to pay for systems to deliver the oil from their refineries.

In some cases, those delivery systems are serious problems. The oil through the pipeline is to be tanker to West Coast refineries. At least one company with a refinery in the Alaskan field of Ohio has a refinery in Houston, and California refineries are resisting an environmental idea of unloading the oil shipment through a pipeline.

The investment—$11 billion or more—will give oil companies with 5 billion barrels of petroleum a day, of 1.2 million barrels a day, may expect to reach fairly start-up, the field will last years.

One of the most complex and difficult construction projects is the temperatures of 50 degrees below zero with winds of 40 mph are common in winter. Some of its strength in such after freezes as hard as stone, permanently frozen a few feet to the surface, and much of that supports the oil wells equipment is simply ice.

When With Thawing in thaws, it becomes pools of water into which equipment slowly disappears. Such thawing the tundra is broke, so kept to a minimum.

In this area with a pipe warm petroleum, engineers system of horizontal supports special pilings buried in the ground cost $9,000, and there are 100 of them.

Lines of 10-inch natural gas pipe five miles of pipe still were delayed in an effort to "cement" demands that geology of the tundra not be necessarily.

Work to be done from a pad now. Where possible in the pipeline was buried in the Sagavanirktok River, supply road, where the fuel tank, and between the Sagavanirktok and Kuparuk Rivers the engine to employ the snow pad.

The line beneath the river when the pipe was built but when disputes arose the pipe was it became necessary to dig the pipe up for repairs. A misnamed construction Happy Valley, 1,000 feet long, is to be uncovered for remedial work.

Supervised by U. S. Agency for the Environment, the Department of Interior supervises construction through an office headed by A. P. Rollins, with staff of engineers and pipeline.

Most engineers, who are, in permanent Federal inspectors, flew last week as they through Anchorage. Arnold H. watches the pipeline terminal at Valdez, said it would be on schedule. James F. Sizemore, E. Carson, who areas are south of the Brooks the Oct. 31 completion date.

The report charged that leaks as 500 barrels of oil a day are "indefinitely" without detection.

He denied that workmanship was sloppy. "Personally, I think it is one of the better projects in this country, the space program," he said. "The quality of workmanship in it is at least the equal of anything ever been done in pipeline."

He said that workmen were on the job, Mr. Patton assure some of that goes on at lunchtime. Everybody gets to eat his lunch. They also have morning and afternoon coffee. "I'm really not in favor of that we've let the country go."

He said that quality control had been assaulted or intimidated never been on a job anywhere, "where people didn't go to the guy who's monitoring and say, 'If you don't lay off your arm.'"

"We have not had anybody," Mr. Patton further asserted, "in a day leaks from the field not go undetected indefinitely," he said, "that our leak detection may not catch a 500-barrel leak. But it would certainly catch our visual surveillance, electronic surveillance or by the use of infra-red detection devices."

Schmidt Victory Widely Hailed in Europe

By FLORA LEWIS

BOON, Oct. 4—The re-election of Chancellor Helmut Schmidt's Socialist-liberal coalition was welcomed throughout Europe today, East and West, because governments almost always prefer the prospect of continued dealings with teams they know to dealing with new ones. Whether the reaction stressed Mr. Schmidt's sharply reduced majority or that he would remain in charge depended on domestic politics.

A Briton watching the returns last night declared happily that they were a good omen for the Conservatives because they showed that European voters were swinging away from the left and cutting its powers of experiment. At the same time the French Socialist leader, François Mitterrand, hailed the results because, he said, they showed that voters found satisfaction and competent government by sticking with Socialists.

The inwardness of the reactions did not stem from indifference to West German affairs. On the contrary, the keeo focus of Europeans on Bonn as a bellwether reflected the acknowledgment that West Germany is the foremost Western European power.

Highly Valued Customer

Apart from politics, the West German economy matters greatly to everyone else: it is a highly valued customer. Trading partners, East and West, benefit when the Germans feel expansive and are buying freely and hurt when they pull in their belts.

The West German mark has become a currency of standard by which others measure the value of their money. Aware of nervousness about Bonn's intentions, Chancellor Schmidt—in his first postelection statement, the one in which politicians usually confine themselves to cheers and thanks—made a point of announcing that the mark would be maintained at existing parities. The market has already revealed it sufficiently, he said—in itself a declaration that is likely to ease upward pressure from speculators who were betting on its increasing in terms of other currencies soon after the election. They have lost the bet.

No important shift had been foreseen in foreign affairs whether the opposition Christian Democrats took over or the existing coalition remained in power, so Europeans did not feel that Common Market or NATO decisions were at stake. There was more concern in Eastern than in Western Europe about the outcome in terms of foreign policy.

For once, West German politicians said, they felt that the United States had been a neutral bystander, not even seeking subtle influence on the vote.

More Restraint in Moscow

The Soviet Union was also far more restrained than it had been toward West Germany's choice, although its preference for the continuation of Social Democratic rule control was evident.

A ranking Polish official put the Eastern view, and especially Warsaw's, even more pointedly. There were no real fears, he said, that the Christian Democrats might reverse policies or turn into the belligerent seekers of revenge that the Communist states have shouted about for so long. But, he went on, the tone of relations with the Socialists, who opened the policy toward the East and negotiated treaties with the Soviet Union, Poland, Czechoslovakia and East Germany, is more comfortable than it might be with conservatives.

The irony of the comment was acknowledged. It was only a few years ago that the Eastern bloc routinely denounced Western Socialists as its worst enemies. That line not only has been dropped but has been replaced by urgent, if quiet, reliance on credits from and trade with a West Germany governed by Social Democrats.

For the West the belief—which may be an illusion but is firmly endorsed by European politicians—that as West Germany goes so will their voters reflects the growth of political as well as economic interdependence in Western Europe.

Only a few years ago Western Europe's concern with an election in West Germany was about what it would do—whether it would lose interest in the Common Market and NATO, tend to neutralism, undercut the efforts and aspirations of its allies.

This time the questions never arose. Instead the queries were about whether German voters' feelings on how their country was being run might turn others to the support of incumbents or opposition.

Though Paris was discreet, it was clear enough in France that the "Reber Helmut, cher Valéry" relation so vaunted between the Chancellor and President Valéry Giscard d'Estaing a year or so ago had given way to more immediate domestic concerns.

For the politicians in the French Government coalition, who are running scared at the challenge of the Socialist-Communist alliance, the ideal result in West Germany would have been Mr. Schmidt's defeat. Then they could have argued before their voters that it would be folly to experiment with Socialism in government since both West Germans and Swedes had tried it and decided they did not like it.

Local Issues and Personalities

As matters turned out both Government and opposition in France could argue that the German voters proved their point since the Social Democrats lost strength even if they retained power. Whether French voters really care is another matter. The politicians sought to take heart where they could.

The election was fought almost entirely on domestic economic and social issues, though only vaguely and narrowly defined, and on personalities and local quirks. If they marked a direction or showed a trend for European politics generally, it seemed to be for moderation, skepticism about the capabilities of government and voter determination to keep the politicians on a short rein.

SCHMIDT IN EFFORTS TO BOLSTER COALITION

an obscure political figure in Mainz, as the Governor of the State of Rhineland-Palatinate.

The Kohl campaign, based on "Freedom Instead of Socialism," won his party's candidates 48.4 percent of the 37.7 million votes cast yesterday, enough to make his bloc of Christian Democratic and Christian Social Union representatives the strongest single group in Parliament, with 244 seats to the coalition's 252.

Kohl in Coalition Moves

At a news conference this morning Mr. Kohl said he would not yet discuss whether he would take over the leadership of the Parliamentary opposition in Bonn. "That would mean I'd have given up the race for the office of Chancellor," he said. He announced that he would formally ask Mr. Genscher to form a coalition with him—the "moral victor" of the election.

In that context, Mr. Genscher said last night that "the voters would have no understanding for a move like that."

An aide to Mr. Kohl said: "Our strategy is to aim at 1980—after this election, it's clear he'll be Chancellor in four years, and it's a matter of making Genscher's Free Democrats see the light by then. We'll make it very, very, very difficult for them."

Today, the aide said, he made an offer to Mr. Genscher in a letter.

Schmidt Starts 'Looking Better'

And Mr. Kohl, today, went to see President Walter Scheel, who must formally nominate a Chancellor for the lower house of Parliament to inaugurate in December. But, rather than a serious attempt to unseat Mr. Schmidt now, Mr. Kohl's visit seemed to be part of his effort to establish himself as a powerful force in Bonn for the long term. Chancellor Schmidt phoned President Scheel last night, and officials of Mr. Genscher's party said today that they had no doubt that when inauguration time came, all 39 of their deputies would vote for Mr. Schmidt. Four Free Democrats—Mr. Genscher, Economics Minister Hans Friderichs, Interior Minister Werner Maihofer and Agriculture Minister Josef Erdl—hold posts in the Schmidt Cabinet now. Mr. Schmidt slept late and did not get to his office until 11 this morning. "He looks tired," said an aide, Armin Grunewald, "but he started looking better as time went on."

The Chancellor, who ignored the leftist "Young Socialists" of his party and campaigned on his record of getting the country through the worst recession since the 1930's, told Social Democratic colleagues today that labor policy would be the key problem of his next administration.

Far-reaching social reforms are not Mr. Schmidt's style and do not seem mandated by the voters' obvious attraction to Mr. Kohl's cautious, middle-class image. The Chancellor seems more likely to continue the same kind of coalition government that marked his first half years in office.

Two Different Worlds

Mr. Kohl grew up in a village around his hometown, Ludwigshafen, some years before Mr. Schmidt, from the north, personality and cultural differences that separate north and south in many ways.

Helmut Kohl likes the wine of the Moselle and the beer of the Rhine, and shuns the 5% Helmut Schmidt's North German Haasatic. When he drinks anything but beer, he drinks anything but beer in the proper manner.

Mr. Kohl was 16 years old when World War II ended, and spent his professional life in state government in Rhineland-Palatinate. The 57-year-old Schmidt remembers the war as a staff officer and his struggle more than ever after the war in his reputation in international matters.

Israeli Forces Seem Strong, and Military's Optimism Gains

By WILLIAM F. FARRELL
Special to The New York Times

JERUSALEM, Oct. 4—Three years after the latest Middle East war the Israeli military forces have been strengthened, revamped and re-equipped to the point where Defense Minister Shimon Peres is talking about a long-term policy that emphasizes the manufacture rather than the purchase of arms.

Israel is still heavily reliant on the United States for much of its sophisticated weapons and will be so for some time. But optimistic forecasts, such as the recent one by Mr. Peres, indicate the new mood in the military establishment.

The outlook is far from the moribund one that resulted from the initial setbacks Israel suffered in October 1973 during the surprise attack by Egypt and Syria. Those setbacks spurred agonizing postmortems about Israel's military preparedness, the efficacy of its intelligence system, the degree of discipline in the military ranks and the adequacy of the top field commanders.

The 1973 war blotted out the last vestiges of the long period of euphoria Israel enjoyed after its decisive military sweep in the six-day war of 1967 and "hung an emotional millstone around our necks," in the words of Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin.

Call for Re-evaluation

After the 1973 war, Mr. Peres said in a recent interview, there was a need to re-evaluate and restore the army's morale, equipment, training and concepts. This was achieved to a great extent and more quickly than had been anticipated, he said.

"We have nominated a new generation of commanders," Mr. Peres said. "Some of the changes involved increasing the size of the army, making the military more maneuverable, establishing a greater integration of artillery, infantry and tank units, re-equipping the infantry and increasing the firepower of each infantry brigade several times over."

"We learned mainly in the Egyptian theater of the need for more cooperation between the armored units and the infantry," a ranking officer said.

Israeli officials prefer not to use numbers when discussing gains in the nation's military might. But some guide to the degree of growth is available in The Military Balance, an annual publication of the International Institute for Strategic Studies. The institute, a London-based independent center, engages in research on problems of international security.

In its estimates for 1976-77, the institute listed the total Israeli armed forces at 188,500, breaking the figure down to 25,500 regulars and 123,000 conscripts. It said Israel was capable of mobilizing its reserves within 72 hours to a strength of 450,000.

1973-74 Strength 300,000

In its estimates for 1973-74, the institute listed the total at 115,000—30,000 regulars and 85,000 conscripts. Adding the reserve potential, the institute arrived at a strength of 300,000.

Some estimates here place the current mobilized Israeli forces, regular and reserve at 600,000—a considerable figure in a nation of 3.5 million people.

The institute's current estimate places the number of armored brigades at 15, an increase of 5 from two years ago. It puts the number of artillery brigades at 9, an increase of 6 from two years ago. Its estimates of 10 infantry brigades, 9 mechanized brigades and 5 parachute brigades are the same as those given two years ago. The institute's latest estimates also show large increases in Israel's tanks, patrol boats and aircraft. Current defense expenditure is placed at $4.2 billion.

Israeli troops on maneuvers in Sinai. Since the 1973 war, the Israeli forces have been strengthened and revamped.

almost a third of the estimated gross national product.

Figures tend to gloss over the commitment that the military has extracted from the average Israeli and the tremendous impact the military has in everyday life. That is driven home when one sees a prosperous 33-year-old businessman, dressed in wrinkled fatigues, patrolling a city street with a submachine gun slung over his shoulder as part of his annual reserve commitment.

A while back, annual reserve training was limited to men up to 41 years of age. Now the limit is 54. Women reservists train until the age of 34 and women are subject to a two-year draft. Men are drafted for three years.

Hard Look at Exemptions

As part of the reorganization, the Israeli defense forces re-evaluated medical exemptions, and many marginal cases were placed on active duty.

In 1973, according to Shmuel Stempier, a military analyst, the incorrect evaluation of enemy intentions delayed mobilization of the defense forces' full power, resulting in an extremely poor balance of forces on both fronts when the war began. A major target of the criticism after the war was Israel's intelligence service, which had enjoyed a reputation for professionalism and accuracy. Much of the criticism, at least that made public, charged that the service had become rigid and bureaucratic.

In the interview, Mr. Peres said that there was now a gaffly group within the intelligence establishment whose purpose was to challenge assumptions based on information compiled by the intelligence network. Everyone can ring the bell, he said, adding that assessments of information now left room for surprises. The lesson of the surprise attack, said a ranking military man, is not to rely solely on intelligence. Summoning the population to an alert, he said, has tremendous economic and social implications, but better 10 false alarms than one attack by surprise.

The past year has been relatively tranquil for the military, at least when compared with calamities of other years. Most officials, both political and military, say this is largely the result of the current chaos in the Arab world, most notably in Lebanon. Military leaders say that the inter-Arab turmoil has given them an added opportunity to carry out necessary changes in the defense forces.

Lieut. Gen. Mordechai Gur, the chief of the general staff, commented: "The quiet on Israel's northern borders with Syria and Lebanon had enabled us, the Israeli defense forces, to worry less about current security problems and concentrate more on preparing ourselves for total war. The Lebanese conflict has enabled us to concentrate more on central matters."

Mr. Peres agreed that conflicts in the Arab world had given Israel some respite but that it was a bonus that could disappear.

Rise in Military Exports

Another ranking military leader said that the lull could create a business-keep the nation tense all the time. What about the prospects for peace, he was asked. "A thing I don't believe in for a generation at least," he replied.

In a recent speech to workers in the defense industry, Mr. Peres said that it had taken a long time for the rest of the world to realize that the Jews were capable of establishing an army of their own, one that could defend the people and their land by itself. "But throughout all these years, we had to carry political favors in order to obtain most of our armaments," he said.

"What we fail to acquire from abroad we must develop at home," the Defense Minister said. "More than half of our defense budget is earmarked for arms purchases. To our great good fortune we also receive financial aid from the United States. But in our long-term policy we should strive as far as possible to switch the emphasis from arms purchases to arms manufacture."

The nation's defense exports, Mr. Peres said, have increased during the last three years by 300 percent. Israel's arms and munitions exports, he said, brought much-needed foreign revenues—$80-million worth—to the country this year. The Israeli military industry, he went on, has embarked on the era of the personal missile. In this sphere, too, it has registered gains, he said, although it was too early to be specific.

Currently, the military is embarking on a recruitment drive to beef up the regular army. One officer involved in the effort noted that the appeal had to be a non-material one because "we cannot compete with the market for the best people." Noting a materialist trend in Israeli society, this officer said the strength of the regular army lay in the fact that Israel still had people motivated by national values, not material convenience.

Recently General Gur recalled the bad press the defense forces received after the October war and compared it with the good press they received after the daring military rescue of the hijacked plane passengers at Entebbe Airport in Uganda in July.

Three years ago, the general said, the problem was the internal image. The Entebbe rescue, he said, was the fruit of two and a half years' work on the internal image. "It was a natural continuation of the efforts that have been invested in the army all through the years and especially after the Yom Kippur war," he said.

Presbyterian Church Reducing Staff at National Headquarters Here

By CORE DUGAN

Five middle-level executives and 23 secretaries were dismissed by the national headquarters of the Presbyterian Church last week in a series of personnel reductions. The church's officers are at their headquarters at 475 Riverside Drive.

The dismissals came as a result of budget cuts and the sharp reductions in staff have raised doubts about the church's effectiveness on the national level. Presbyterians grant local churches and regional synods great control over the programs and funds and many church officials concede that the lack of support for national budgets signals serious resistance.

While most other large liberal Protestant groups have undergone similar programs that were unpopular, the United Presbyterian Church, the northern Presbyterian branch that came into being at the time of the Civil War, appears to be pulling out of the crisis at a slower pace than most.

The latest dismissals came after the 1976 assembly called upon the church's program and support agencies to reduce their combined 1977 budget proposals from $31.8 million to $28.3 million.

Hardest hit were the church's support agencies such as communications, research, legal services and fund-raising. Suffering to a lesser degree were its program agencies in the fields of evangelism and related areas.

One support agency, the department of broadcasting, which included programming in radio and television, was abolished.

Its head, the Rev. Donald G. Roper, was not dismissed but was moved into the department of information.

the dismissals to the "confluence" of deepening inflation and a sweeping restructuring of the organization of the church that began in 1974.

He insisted that he was "no apologist" for actions of the general assemblies but said that no individual could have foreseen the "immensity and magnitude" of the restructuring process.

Vic Jameson, head of the information department, saw the cause as a combination of inflation, a hangover of protests going back to the church's social activism of the 60's and the fact that the local church was providing less and less financial support to the national programs of the church and retaining more for pressing regional problems.

Greek-American Journalist Gets 15 Months, in Absentia, in Athens

ATHEENS, Oct. 4 (Reuters)—A Greek-American journalist was sentenced to 15 months' imprisonment in his absence today for asserting that an Athens English-language newspaper was on the payroll of the Soviet intelligence service, the K.G.B.

A lawyer told an Athens civil court that Takis Theodorakopoulos, a correspondent for William F. Buckley's conservative National Review magazine was in the United States.

According to the indictment, Mr. Theodorakopoulos had contended that the English-language daily Athens News and two other Greek national dailies, which he did not name, had been infiltrated by the K.G.B. and were receiving money from it. The report was published in the National Review.

Mr. Theodorakopoulos was sued by Ioannis Horn, owner and publisher of Athens News, who considered his allegations defamatory.

Gurney Trial Put Off Until Oct. 12

ORLANDO, Fla., Oct. 4 (AP)—The perjury trial of former Senator Edward Gurney has been postponed until Oct. 12 by Federal District Judge George C. Young. Mr. Gurney, 62 years old, a Republican from Winter Park, is charged with lying to a grand jury when he denied knowing until June of 1972 that a fund raiser was collecting money for him by allegedly pressuring building contractors in Florida.

A Study of Malpractice Deaths Reported Ended Without Action

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 4 (AP)—A mortality survey committee of city doctors spent eight years reviewing hospital deaths caused by alleged malpractice but kept no records and took no disciplinary action, according to the Philadelphia medical examiner.

Dr. Marvin Aronson said that he and the previous medical examiner, Dr. Joseph Spelman, had presented cases of "serious breaches of medical practice (that) had resulted in the death of the patient" to the committee, which was part of the Philadelphia County Medical Society.

"It was supposed to be very hush-hush," Dr. Aronson said. "There were no minutes taken so they couldn't be taken into court. It was kept secret."

He said the committee believed that doctors might cooperate better with the investigation if no records were kept. "For years they would just send a letter [to the doctor involved]. They were just scared to death of offending someone," Dr. Aronson said.

Cases the medical examiner took to the committee included failures to diagnose head injuries, inaccurately placed hip pins that severed arteries and arteries punctured during other surgery.

The victims' relatives were not told of the committee's case reviews.

Little Effect Found

Dr. Aronson said that the committee never disciplined doctors. Dr. Norman Kendall, who headed the committee for four years, said that the findings were never passed along to the state Board of Medical Education and Licensure, which controls doctors' licenses to practice.

Dr. Aronson said he believed that the committee, which disbanded in 1974, had little effect.

"There never was any action of the county medical society to discipline. At maximum they were given instructional letters to cover their situation."

"It certainly wasn't the purpose of the committee the way I envisioned it," he continued. "I always knew I had the impression when I presented cases that it was medical malpractice."

Dr. Kendall said that records had not been kept because of the fear of malpractice suits.

"As you can imagine, the issue was frequently raised as to what was the malpractice exposure and were we legally permitted to do what we were doing," he said.

"A lot of people raised that issue and were very, very fearful that there was the element of malpractice here that we had to be very careful of."

Act 193 of the 1974 state legislature says that any person providing information to peer-review committees that investigate health care cannot be held civilly liable or found to have violated any criminal law.

Mormon Who Ordained Black Man Is Barred From Church Conference

SALT LAKE CITY, Oct. 4 (UPI)—A man who ordained a black man to the Mormon priesthood in defiance of church doctrine was barred from the church's semiannual conference yesterday under a court order.

A deputy sheriff served the order on Douglas A. Wallace, 46 years old, of Vancouver, Wash., at Temple Square prior to the closing session of the 148th semi-annual World Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints.

Church lawyers obtained the court order last week, claiming that Mr. Wallace had threatened to disrupt the conference in the Mormon Tabernacle. Federal District Judge Marcellus Snow scheduled a hearing Friday on whether Mr. Wallace should be permanently banned from Temple Square.

Mr. Wallace was excommunicated from the church earlier this year when he baptized a black man in a motel swimming pool and ordained him to the Mormon priesthood. Blacks are prohibited from holding the priesthood in the Mormon church.

GIFT OF $1,000 FROM A.M.A. IS RETURNED BY CANDIDATE

HOUGHTON, Mich., Oct. 4 (AP)—Representative Philip E. Ruppe, Republican of Michigan, says his campaign Committee is returning a check for $1,000 to the national American Medical Association's Political Action Committee.

Mr. Ruppe was one of 21 Congressional candidates listed by public affairs lobby, Common Cause, who, it said, received contributions from the American Medical Association and its state affiliates in excess of legal limits.

Common Cause filed a complaint last weekend with the Federal Election Commission saying the A.M.A. had violated the limits on contributions to political candidates. It said Mr. Ruppe received $8,000 from political action committees of the A.M.A. while the law sets the limit at $5,000.

Mr. Ruppe said today that his committee had accepted two separate contributions from two medical association committees—the national committee and the state Michigan committee.

"While the total of the two was $8,000, neither has exceeded the authorized limit of $5,000 per election," he said.

"Pending a formal ruling from the F.E.C. and so there is absolutely no question about my consistent record of complying fully with the law, my committee will return at once to the American Medical Association's Political Action Committee—the national committee—a check for the amount of $1,000," he said.

Richmond Bus Company Is Struck Affecting Some 35,000 Commuters

RICHMOND, Oct. 4 (AP)—Union drivers and mechanics for the Greater Richmond Transit Company went on strike today, and some 35,000 commuters in the area had to seek alternate means of transportation.

The decision to strike was made at a meeting yesterday of some 300 of the 400 members of the Amalgamated Transit Workers Local 1220.

The union's three-year contract with a private concern that runs the buses for the city expired at midnight last Thursday. Wages are the chief issue in the dispute between the union and the city. The present top scale for drivers and mechanics is $5.97 an hour. Union spokesmen said that the city's last offer was a three-year contract providing an increase of 16 cents an hour over 12 months.

'Modest Recovery' in the Economy Linked to Rise in Government Jobs

By PETER KIBBS

A labor union analysis has reported that the nation's "modest economic recovery" resulted primarily from massive increases in government jobs rather than from jobs in the so-called free market.

Nonfarm, private payroll jobs rose only 1.2 percent, or 766,000 compared to a rise in government jobs of 10 percent, or 1,325,000 between July, 1973, and last July, according to Teamsters Joint Council 16, based on Federal Bureau of Labor Statistics data.

Nicholas Kisburg, the council's legislative director, who is an adjunct assistant professor at Fordham University, said this compared pre-recession and post-recession July's. The National Bureau of Economic Research, in a widely accepted definition, dates the last recession to have started in November 1973, reaching a low in March 1975.

According to the teamsters' tabulation, jobs in city and county government increased by 858,000, or 11.1 percent, in the three-year period through last July, jobs in state government rose by 371,000, or 13.3 percent, and Federal jobs rose 96,000, or 3.6 percent.

New York Contrast

In New York State, the study reported that nonfarm private payroll jobs — a category that excludes the self-employed and household workers, as well as agricultural work — were down 7 percent, or 411,100, while government jobs were up 2.7 percent, or 34,500.

New Jersey was down 7.1 percent, or 168,200, in the private sector, while it had a rise of 16.6 percent, or 67,500 in government jobs, while Connecticut had a private-job decline of 1.3 percent, or 14,100, and a government-job rise of 6.4 percent, or 10,400, according to the study.

Nationally, the study reported 64,386,000 private-sector jobs and 14,514,000 government jobs last July. Mr. Kisburg said that 23 states and the District of Columbia had not yet recovered their pre-recession, nonfarm private payroll level of July 1973, although all of these but Rhode Island had gains in government employment.

A longtime analyst of employment trends, Mr. Kisburg contended that President Ford was "in error" in crediting the job recovery thus far to personal income tax cuts, business investment credits and business incentives.

Instead, the labor union official said that most of the cause appeared to be "the massive and potentially dangerous increases in state and local government," rather than in the tax-paying private sector.

Governments, he said, created 1.7 nonfarm payroll jobs in the three-year period as compared with each new job by private enterprise.

Financing System Scored

What has happened, Mr. Kisburg contended, has been in effect "a modified implementation of the alleged purposes of the Humphrey-Hawkins bill, financed by those levels of government in our Federal system least able to afford it."

The pending Congressional bill includes proposals for Federal financing of public-service jobs when planned goals are not being otherwise met by the economy.

Describing the recovery so far as "modest," Mr. Kisburg said that the rise in nonfarm private payroll jobs in the year ended last July was 2,166,000, compared with the previous year's decline of 2,645,000 in that category.

Of the 16 largest industrial states, Mr. Kisburg said that only California, Texas and Wisconsin showed private job increases in the three-year period studied. All three had larger growth rates in public jobs, he said, although Texas and Wisconsin did add more private workers than their government job increases.

The Manhattan Savings Bank

You might not want to work here. But it's a great place to bank.

If you were one of our executives, you'd have duties beyond the call of duty.

We don't want our bank to be a boring place to spend time. So every year, we put on an average of 70 in-bank entertainments. Everything from exhibitions of pure-bred dogs to a three-week-long Christmas show. And we expect our people to help out. (One Christmas, a vice-president spent every lunch hour for a week running a snow machine.)

If you were one of our tellers, you'd have to eat lunch at indigestible hours.

Like 10:15 A.M. Because when a customer comes into the bank on his lunch hour, we want our tellers there.

So the customer spends less of his lunch at the bank. And more of his lunch at lunch.

If you were in our 'new accounts' department, you'd have to teach elementary economics.

Some people have trouble saving money. And you don't just hand those people a passbook and offer them your thanks. If need be, you show them how to save money. You discuss their savings goals... then set up a systematic savings plan tailored to their individual needs. So they'll end-up with more than one of our passbooks. They'll end-up with more money inside.

If you handled checking accounts, you'd have to unscramble checkbooks that boggle the imagination.

These days, every savings bank offers you free checking.

But not every savings bank offers you a free officer who'll sit down with you and share the aggravation of balancing your checkbook. Every month, if necessary, until you've gotten the hang of doing it yourself.

If you were one of our guards, you'd have to teller's school.

We'd expect you to understand banking procedures. So in addition to guarding, you could guide people when they came in the door.

If you were in charge of our door, you might have to open after you'd closed.

Sometimes a customer arrives late. And we don't leave him in the lurch.

Even if it means we have to work a few minutes late that night.

If you were one of our officers, you'd have to learn to speak a new language.

You'd have to go to class, where you'd learn to translate the language of banking into a language people understand. Plain English.

If you were one of our branch managers you'd have to learn to make a decent pot of coffee.

Because every morning, in our suburban branch that's what we serve our customers. Good coffee and fresh pastry. Free.

If you were our chairman, you'd have to answer your own phone.

At The Manhattan Savings Bank, no one lives in an ivory tower. If the phone rings, and you're in your office, you pick it up...no matter who you are. That way a customer with important business doesn't get the run-around from a secretary. He gets a direct answer or decision from you.

It's a lot easier to bank at The Manhattan Savings Bank than it is to work here.

We put demands on our employees that a lot of them wouldn't. Which is why we sometimes lose a few of our employees to banks where the living is easy.

But we're not in the banking business to make things easy for employees.

We're in the banking business to make things nicer for you.

Oct. 4—Prompted by indications that economic conditions are increasingly decisive in the presidential election, Jimmy Carter today criticized the Ford Administration's unemployment, suggesting insensitivity to the human problems by such problems.

TWA beats American and United's on-time performance in cities all across the country.

The facts are in. Right through the latest reporting period, July 1976, TWA has beaten American and United's on-time performance for the past 14 months in cities all across the country.

We beat them between New York and Los Angeles, New York and San Francisco, New York and Chicago and many other cities.

These statistics are shown in CAB records for flights actually flown and include the busiest city-to-city flight segments. The records show that TWA has the best on-time performance on more routes where we compete with American and United—based on percent of arrivals within 15 minutes of schedule.

Democratic Party's Financial Problems Arousing Anxiety and Causing Salary

By CHRISTOPHER LYDON

Money problems at the Democratic National Committee have brought grave anxiety to high levels of the Presidential campaign, as well as more salary cuts on Jimmy Carter's staff.

The fund-raising effort by the party chairman, Robert S. Strauss, is still $2 million short of the $3.2 million promised directly to the Presidential ticket. The national committee is also passing the word to state party organizations that $2 million planned for get-out-the-vote drives will probably not be available. Strictly speaking, the second $2 million was not Carter campaign money, but the Carter campaign was counting on its being spent.

The party has commissioned some supplementary radio and television commercials from Tony Schwartz of New York (the advertising man best remembered for the anti-Goldwater spots that cut from a girl in a daisy field to an atom bomb mushroom cloud). But unless some money turns up, it will be impossible to get the old schedule of Jerry Rafshoon's ads on the air, much less the new ones.

Steve Selig and Richard Harden, Carter financiers from Atlanta, went to Washington last week to inspect Mr. Strauss's stalled money machine and, according to several accounts, went home "very discouraged."

Their last, best hope, they agreed, is a closed-circuit television appeal on Oct. 19, directed to a fairly small net of large party-givers, focused around dinners with Democratic governors in states that have them and held, where possible, in a governor's mansion. No one is sure that the $3 million goal is reachable.

One ranking Democrat defined the spirit of the closed-circuit idea in the remark, "It's like chicken soup—it can't hurt." Mr. Carter and his running mate, Senator Walter F. Mondale of Minnesota, will address the contributors. There will be no entertainment.

Among the many angry questions being asked about the problems in Democratic fund-raising is: "What ever happened to the 10 concerts that John Denver was asked to give for the Carter campaign?"

Jelly Weintraub, the impresario who books John Denver, Neil Diamond, Frank Sinatra and others, flew to Plains, Ga., last summer to confer with Mr. Carter. But all that resulted is one Denver appearance scheduled for Oct. 15 in 7,000-seat Freedom Hall in Johnson City, Tenn.—not one of the media or finance capitals even of the New South.

The story around the Carter campaign is that Mr. Denver refused to sing for politics in any market where he was booked on his own over the next 18 months. Mr. Weintraub said that he had "no idea" what went wrong, adding that he had gone to Plains only to say hello.

Neil Diamond, meanwhile, has committed one fund-raising concert to Senator Edward M. Kennedy, the Massachusetts Democrat. Frank Sinatra—with Helen Reddy and Diana Ross and with Warren Beatty as master of ceremonies—netted $300,000 last month in a Los Angeles concert for Senator John V. Tunney, the California Democrat.

Less than an hour after his successful title defense in New York last week, the heavyweight boxing champion, Muhammad Ali, took a congratulatory phone call from President Ford and announced that he would support the President's election next month. Three nights earlier he told the Congressional Black Caucus Center in Washington, in a telephoned speech, "I may have to vote for President Ford."

The boxer explained that Mr. Ford "has invited me to the White House three times—and you folks have never invited me to the White House once." The situation is somewhat clouded, close associates of the boxer say, by the reports of racist remarks by Agriculture Secretary Earl L. Butz, who resigned today. And a full public endorsement of the President by the boxer and his church, the Chicago-based Nation of Islam, awaits a high-level statement of the Ford Administration's commitment to minority business enterprise.

Meanwhile, Herbert Muhammad, Mr. Ali's manager, was in Plains, Ga., Saturday for the $5,000 per person fund-raiser for the Democratic Party. Don King, who has promoted some of Mr. Ali's most lucrative bouts, is openly aligned with Mr. Carter. Eugene Dibble, one of Mr. Ali's business managers, and a lifelong Republican, has been the Ford endorsement.

Wagering on politics is in Nevada, so that even in the Mecca for legal gambling no official line on the President yet. All betting is do man at odds the gambler selves. But according to the widely quoted oddsman Union Plaza sports book, has moved from a 3-to-1 the time of the Democrat Convention in July to a 5-to-1 or 7-to-5 pick this weekend.

"It's close," Mr. Martin interview yesterday. "Ca hasn't come across. The Ford Carter hasn't established Ford is Ford, no matter what Carter is more the unknown Mr. Martin, reporting, considers Carter the best said. "I just have a feeling people something to lean on

The Turn-on-a-Dime Office.

Because that's the way business is.

September, 1976.

You install Itkin's Action Offices. They're a new concept: flexible panel systems and a variety of office components. You'll save 20% or more in space. And you'll avoid the need for additional rent or building costly walls.

December, 1976.

You increase Accounting Dept. by 3 people. No fixed walls, expensive demolition and rebuilding, rewiring or air conditioning changes. Building maintenance men or your people can easily move free-standing partitions and desks.

May, 1977.

You add 3 people to Data Processing Dept. Also move office supplies into part of shipping area. Use acoustically-designed panels to reduce sound. Save $20 to $30 a sq. ft. it would cost to make comparable changes in a fixed wall office.

August, 1977.

You redo Recept. Area, add Library and V.P. office. Your third change in a year. But your cost will be minimal because you don't have to reconstruct walls, wiring or air conditioning. That's why they're called Turn-On-A-Dime Offices.

This is a new concept in office systems, a concept that works whether you have an office of 10 people or 500 people. It is the Action Office System, developed by Herman Miller. The idea is simple—a flexible panel system with an almost infinite variety of office components that are mounted on the panels. Panels can be high or low for as much privacy as needed.

Save money on space and on office alterations. Fixed wall offices waste space. The Turn-On-A-Dime Office will save you 10% to 30% on floor space. That's rent, a major part of fixed overhead.

When you want to make construction changes with fixed walls, it can run $5 to $12 a sq. ft. Then add the cost for electrical, air conditioning, floor and ceiling alterations and it can reach a figure of $20 to $30 a sq. ft. With this new system, you can make changes for about $.50 to $.75 per sq. ft. because you move panels, not walls.

Change is simple. Your own maintenance people or The Itkins staff can do it overnight, or on a weekend, without work interruption. It's almost like moving furniture. Work flows smoothly. People communicate better.

This system is people-oriented. While each person has his own operational unit, there is also smooth-running efficiency where communication is easier and quicker.

There may be people in your office who require permanent walls. But, even within these walls, the modular furniture units create a space-saving, efficient and handsome environment.

If you're thinking of moving, Action Offices can save you money now and in the future. We may even save you the money and trouble of moving. Or if you're just dissatisfied with your present use of office space or concerned about future efficiency, call or send the coupon.

We'll send you full details on our Turn-On-A-Dime Office.

BUTZ QUILTS POSITION OVER RACIST REMARK

at the vindication of the American system."

But Senator Robert C. Byrd, Democrat of West Virginia, said that Mr. Ford should have "demanded the resignation" instead of trying "to ride out the storm."

Allan Grant, president of the conservative American Farm Bureau Federation, called Mr. Butz the best Secretary of Agriculture American farmers had ever had.

"I don't consider Butz a liability in Mr. Ford's campaign," he said, "but apparently the President does. If people think Earl Butz resigned voluntarily, it probably won't make any difference in how they vote in November. But if they believe he was forced out, it's going to hurt the President among farmers."

A spokesman for the more liberal National Farmers Organization, which has often opposed Mr. Butz, said: "Now perhaps the public will examine the real issues of food and agriculture in this campaign instead of spending their time to pass around Earl Butz's crude jokes."

Before reading his letter of resignation and final statement to reporters at the White House, Mr. Butz said the decision to resign had been his and his alone, supported by his wife.

Plans To Campaign

"At no time was any pressure from the White House put on me," Mr. Butz said, adding that he had "penned" his resignation statement last night.

Asked about his plans for the future, Mr. Butz replied: "To campaign for Mr. Ford." He left without taking any additional questions.

"President Ford is a decent man with high moral values, who insists that every American be treated equally and with dignity," Mr. Butz said in his statement. "Every member of his Administration must and does subscribe to the same values."

He defended the "record of the Ford Administration with respect to minorities" as "one of generous program support, sympathetic and dignified treatment and genuine progress in economic and social terms."

"This will continue to receive top priority," he said.

Praising the Administration's record, Mr. Butz continued: "My resignation must in no way be interpreted as signaling a change in the farm policies of the Ford Administration."

Mr. Ford appeared briefly a short while later and solemnly read his own statement, refusing to take questions.

He said that Mr. Butz had sought to resign two years ago but had remained in office at the President's request.

"He no longer plays the game; he no longer dares," the Secretary had said.

Public protests eventually faded after Mr. Butz, on Mr. Ford's orders, issued an apology.

Aside from such flippant public utterances, Mr. Butz always became earnest and solemn when speaking of his farm philosophy, which opposed government intervention and sought to promote high farm income through increased exports.

President Ford announcing he had accepted resignation of Earl L. Butz, Secretary of Agriculture, yesterday at the White House.

Mr. Butz was the longest-serving member of President Nixon's Cabinet, serving Mr. Ford despite a long record of controversial comments. While often abrasive to consumers, nutritionists, and environmentalists, the Secretary's blunt remarks had helped make him a popular speaker at gatherings of farm and agribusiness groups.

But at least one previous remark had proved embarrassing to Mr. Ford.

Two years ago, Mr. Butz had quoted a fictitious Italian woman in a heavy accent as a comment on the Pope's attitude toward birth control.

"He no longer plays the game; he no longer dares," the Secretary had said.

Acting Secretary of Agriculture

John Albert Knebel

By DIANE HENRY

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Oct. 4—After six years as a Government lawyer—on Capitol Hill, with the Small Business Administration and the Department of Agriculture—John Albert Knebel decided last year that he had had enough and he was going to return to a more lucrative life as a private lawyer in Washington. But today, his 40th birthday, Mr. Knebel received a call from the White House and he is now running the Department of Agriculture as its Acting Secretary.

Last December, he was lured back to the department as Under Secretary by Secretary Earl L. Butz for what he thought would be a temporary tour until after this fall's election, according to his close associates.

Those who have known him well during his years of working on agriculture matters said today that they would not expect any deviation from the policies laid down by Mr. Butz.

"He is compatible with Butz, right of center in terms of agriculture policy, a Republican and a conservative," said Hyde H. Murray, counsel for the House Agriculture Committee.

"He'll be comfortable with Jerry Ford, the Republicans and the establishment role," Mr. Murray added.

Senior members of the Agriculture Department could not recall any incident in which Mr. Knebel has disagreed with Mr. Butz on a policy matter. However, J. Michael Kelly, a counsel for the department, added that Mr. Knebel had been Under Secretary for only 10 months, and that during the two years he was general counsel—from January 1973 to April 1975—he was usually not in a position to disagree on department philosophy.

But while the transfer of power to Mr. Knebel may be made smoothly from the point of view of farmers and those in agribusiness, there is one factor in Mr. Knebel's background that could cause him difficulty in the public eye.

For four years in the late 1960's and more recently during the interval between jobs as general counsel and Under Secretary of the department, Mr. Knebel was a lawyer in the firm of Brownstein, Zeidman, Schomer and Chase, which represents a subsidiary of Cook Industries Inc., one of the companies indicted recently in the grain-loading scandal. Mr. Knebel told the Senate Agriculture Committee that he had not personally appeared before the department on behalf of Cook Industries, although he listed seven other clients he represented before the department.

But if questions are raised about a possible conflict of interest with the law firm's work for Cook, they will likely be muted by his presumed short term as Acting Secretary. In addition, it is well known by agriculture experts that Mr. Knebel angered many in the grain trade by his tough stand and outspoken remarks about the department's grain investigation.

"We're going to put every son of a gun in jail we get our hands on," he told a reporter last January when the grain scandal was sizzling.

Mr. Knebel, a native of Oklahoma, is highly regarded by his friends, including Democrats, as a "straight shooter" and an intelligent hard-working man. In addition to tackling a full load of work at the Agriculture Department, he has served as vice president of the Federal Bar Association and is scheduled to become its president later this month.

Mr. Knebel and his wife Zensia have three children, Marie, 12, John, 9, and Mark, 10. They live in suburban McLean Va., from which Mr. Knebel commutes in a Mercedes-Benz sports car.

He coaches his children's soccer team, and when he gets the chance, he tries to satisfy his appetite for tennis.

Mr. Knebel, a 1963 graduate of the United States Military Academy at West Point, served four years in the Air Force before coming to Washington to work as a legislative assistant to an upstate New York Representative, J. Ernest Wharton, while putting himself through law school at night at American University.

He's making us proud again.

Texts of Butz Statement and Letter and Ford's

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Oct. 4—Following are the texts of a statement by Secretary of Agriculture Earl L. Butz, who resigned today; of a letter from Mr. Butz to President Ford, and of Mr. Ford's reply.

Butz Statement

I have submitted my resignation to the President as a member of the Cabinet.

This is the price I pay for a gross indiscretion in a private conversation. The use of a bad racial commentary in no way reflects my real attitude.

By taking this action, I hope to remove even the appearance of racism as an issue in the Ford campaign. President Ford is a decent man with high moral values, who insists that every American be treated equally and with dignity. Every member of his Administration must and does subscribe to the same values.

The record of the Ford Administration with respect to minorities is one of generous program support, sympathetic and dignified treatment, and genuine progress in economic and social terms. This area will continue to receive top priority.

My resignation must in no way be interpreted as signaling a change in the farm policies of the Ford Administration. Under President Ford, net farm income in the United States is more than double the level of 1965-68—the last four years of the Johnson Administration. Exports have tripled, cost to the taxpayer has been reduced by three-fourths, and 60 million acres formerly held out of production at public expense have been released for production. Farmers have had the yoke of bureaucratic control lifted from them. World and domestic food needs are being filled more adequately than ever before. The use of food and food assistance programs for humanitarian needs is much higher than in the 1960's.

It is important that the agricultural program of this Administration be continued. That is why farmers should support Gerald Ford in the election. That is why I shall continue to work tirelessly for his election.

Butz Letter

Dear Mr. President:

I hereby submit my resignation as Secretary of Agriculture.

I sincerely apologize for any offense that may have been caused by the unfortunate choice of language used in a recent conversation and reported publicly.

It has been a high privilege to serve as a member of the Ford Administration. American farmers will always be grateful to you for your solid support of our efforts to raise their incomes and to permit them to manage their farms without excessive governmental regulation.

I shall always be your ardent supporter.

Sincerely yours,
Earl L. Butz

Statement by Ford

I want to announce to you today my decision to accept the resignation of Earl Butz as Secretary of Agriculture.

This has been one of the decisions of my President.

Two years ago Earl Butz wanted to leave until the end of this term. At my request he agreed to stay until I could implement my policies. Production coupled with the consumer and get farmers through sales throughout the world.

Earl Butz has been a close personal man who loves his country and represents it.

Earl Butz has devoted years of his life to public service.

As an Assistant Secretary of Eisenhower Administration, as a professor and at one of our most distinguished universities; —And more recently, as a member of the Ford Administration, American farmers will always be grateful to you for your solid support of our efforts to raise their incomes and to permit them to manage their farms without excessive governmental regulation.

Yet Earl Butz is also and courageous enough that no single individual, how distinguished his pedigree, should cast a shadow over the good will of the American Government by his comments.

For that reason I have accepted his resignation of this day.

Asian-American Voters Play Growing Role in Carter Drive

By FRED FERRETTI

"It's the first time that anybody has recognized us as an official part of a Presidential campaign," said Esther Kee. "It used to be we were told, 'You can run a rally. You can run a storefront.' It's not that anymore."

And so Mrs. Kee, the wife of a lawyer and member of New York City's Commission on Human Rights, sits in Carter-Mondale headquarters here in a room papered with United States maps, detailing Chinese, Japanese and Filipino-American population concentrations by county and with the names of Asian-American newspapers, and gets out the Asian-American vote for the Democratic/Presidential ticket.

Mrs. Kee is Eastern regional coordinator for the Asian/Pacific American Unit, one of several hundred Asian-Americans who propelled themselves into the Carter campaign during and after the Democratic National Convention here in July.

Growing Political Presence

The awareness by the Carter campaign of the growing political presence and visibility of Asian-Americans is significant because it recognizes changes in voting patterns among these minority groups. Most middle-class Asian-Americans, mainly Chinese and Japanese, who have voted, have backed Republicans, though in New York they have often voted Democratic.

But Mrs. Kee said that only registrations showed a switch, among the young in particular, to the Democratic Party.

"Jimmy wants things from us and we want something from him," Mrs. Kee said in an interview. "What? A recognition that we're here, that we want to be heard, that we want to be included. And for the first time I think we are."

The Asian/Pacific American Unit is chaired byoji Konoahima, a professor of Japanese at New York University who works in Atlanta. He said in a telephone interview that the unit included the leaders of two of the five districts the Carter camp has divided California into. The two are David Ushio, who is in charge of the San Francisco-San Jose area, and Koz Umemoto, in charge of the Los Angeles District.

Several Staff Coordinators

In addition, Ellen Endo is a staff-level coordinator in Los Angeles, and other Japanese-Americans and Chinese-Americans are scheduling and staff coordinators, the professor said.

A California Assemblyman, Floyd Mori, a Japanese-American, is Mr. Carter's West Coast coordinator, and Jo Chicago an Asian-American group called the Asian Forum is devoting itself to supporting local candidates but also has endorsed Mr. Carter.

Mrs. Kee, a Chinese-American, is coordinator for New York, Washington, Boston, Wilmington, Del., Baltimore, and all of New Jersey. She has organized Committees of One Hundred among Chinese, Japanese, Filipino, and Korean-Americans in these cities who are for the most part community and social workers in the various Asian-American communities.

She says that "in past campaigns we were always with the others," reduced to being parts of other minority units. We were tired of that and we told Carter so."

At the Democratic convention, she said, the Asian-American delegates numbered about 50. "But we had no voice; We were not consulted on any issues, or on the platform," she said.

"We are the third largest minority group and we had no visibility, no political clout, so we went to Andy Chisholm and told him we wanted to be in," she continued. Andrew Chisholm is Mr. Carter's director of minority affairs. "We wanted to know if Jimmy Carter was concerned, if he was interested, and if he was how would he show his concern?"

A week after the convention, Mrs. Kee said, "we were told by [Mr. Carter] would create the unit."

The unit's New York coordinator is Harold Liu, a Chinatown resident who has been active in housing and community action projects in that Manhattan neighborhood.

Increased Vote in Chinatown

Mrs. Kee said the unit's efforts resulted in 1,300 votes in Chinatown where in the last primary election there had been none. The unit is also canvassing Flushing, Jackson Heights, Bay side, Rego Park, Elmhurst and all sections of Queens.

Last Sunday Mrs. Kee called a press conference for the Asian-American press—The Sun Tao Pao, The China Tribune, Sai Gai, China Times, United Journal and Sino Communications, all Chinatown newspapers, and The Nira Cagon, and The Filipino Reporter, both

Filipino-American newspapers. A Japanese-American publication, The New York Nichibei, and Bridge, an Asian-American magazine, also attended the press conference.

"It was the first time called like that," Mrs. Kee said. "I think it was important that we were known to be coming alive politically."

Dole Calls Carter 'Frightening' on Foreign

By DOUGLAS E. KNEELAND

WASHINGTON, Oct. 4—Senator Robert J. Dole, the Republican Vice-Presidential candidate, asserted today that Jimmy Carter was "downright frightening" in some of his pronouncements on foreign and defense policies.

Speaking before the American Bankers Association convention here, Mr. Dole unfolded what might well have been a preview of President Ford's basic tactics for his debate Wednesday night in San Francisco with Mr. Carter, the Democratic Presidential nominee.

The Senator said that since the second debate was to be confined to foreign and defense matters, he had decided to speak on that area rather than on economics before the bankers' convention.

The Kansas theorist proceeded to paint Mr. Carter as confused and inexperienced in foreign and defense affairs, saying at one point that "if Mr. Carter is less than reassuring on the question of maintaining our defense forces, he is downright frightening, in discussing how he might use them."

The effort to raise fears among voters about the fitness of Mr. Carter to handle the executive reins, while picturing Mr. Ford as a cool, steady, experienced sitting President, has been advocated by John B. Connally, the former Governor of Texas, and adopted with some apparent success, if the narrowing national polls are any measure, over the last few weeks by the Ford-Dole camp.

White House Approved Speech

Today's speech by Mr. Dole, which his aides said was written by staff members, but was approved by the White House and the National Security Council, carefully followed that pattern.

Before several thousand bankers and their guests crowded into Constitution Hall, Mr. Dole accused Mr. Carter of having, among other things, done the following:

1. Advocated a greater participation in the formulation and implementation of foreign policy by a Democratic Congress, which Mr. Dole said had a record in such matters "which might charitably be called dismal."

2. Called for "openness" in the conduct of negotiations by the Secretary of State with other heads of Government and foreign ministers rather than "secret" discussions, though, Mr. Dole insisted, "Mr. Carter must know that negotiations among nations require a measure of discretion."

3. Demonstrated that he was merely paying "lip service" to that same "openness" by acknowledging that he would conduct "unpublicized negotiations" with the Soviet Union over the Middle East. 4. Suggested that "in a Carter Administration, there would be less emphasis on military strength" by replacing a balance-of-power world-order politics.

Recalling that this involved in four ways "all under Democrats," that "nothing invites us

He went on to imply that the Democrats said he would attempt.

Senator Dole added already "created an ally" by declaring nuclear weapons off-limits, he said, "weakened our nuclear deterrent."

President's Keen

"In contrast to the taint and confusion in our defense and foreign policy," Mr. Dole said, "of President Ford."

What the nation needs is a wise, experienced leader in the White House to lead this nation out of a "poke" and "the way out of this happen-want to own gold, the coin you want to own in front of all the rest. Here is why.

beginning, gold coins were made to be spent. money. And they were spent. This continues. So naturally, certain coins became here arose a value in collecting them.

of course, wasn't the whole story. Some had aesthetic values—a striking design, an or commemorative purpose, or were relics of or culture.

practically all gold coins are numismatic ch means they're sold not only for their gold ut also for their rarity and aesthetics. And prices well above their actual gold value.

kinds of gold coins are not for gold owners, or coin collectors. Only collectors have the judge the rare and aesthetic values of a coin. expertise and lots of continuing study of the coin market—and even then a new “find” or a “restriking” of a coin can diminish its value.

Most of you are not gold coin collectors, you are gold owners. So the coin you want is one that's valued for its gold content alone.

Ideally, it should also be a coin with an exact quantity of gold (instead of hard-to-calculate percentages). And it should be backed by a country as legal tender—so you can trust the coinage.

The coin for you is the South African Krugerrand. It stands apart because it was designed to meet the gold owner's requirements. And it has become the most sold gold coin in the world.

A Krugerrand contains exactly one troy ounce of pure gold. And it is also a legal tender coin, minted by the South African Government. Its price is based on its one-ounce gold content. (You pay only a small additional premium—and that's because of coinage and distribution.)

A gold owner always knows what his Krugerrand is worth by checking the world gold-ounce price in the daily newspaper. And because it is the world's most popular gold coin, there exists a broad market for him to buy and sell them. (They are available at many banks, brokerage firms and coin dealers.)

Krugerrands also hold an advantage over regular gold bullion (the bars or wafers). One doesn't pay the often required assay costs (usually $50) if he sells.

If you want to be a gold coin collector, you should begin studying.

If you want to be a gold owner, you may begin.

Review of McCarthy Petitions Is Begun by New York Elections Board

By FRANK LYNN

With New York State's 41 electoral votes possibly hanging in the balance, the State Board of Elections yesterday began to review a staff report that questions enough of Eugene J. McCarthy's petitions to deny him a place on the state ballot as an independent Presidential candidate.

The challenge of the McCarthy petitions by the Democratic State Committee reflects the view that the former United States Senator from Minnesota would siphon enough votes to jeopardize Jimmy Carter's chances in the state. Most politicians agree that Mr. Carter must win in New York to capture the White House.

Court Action Seen

Against that backdrop, the McCarthy case also focuses attention on the bipartisan Board of Elections. At least two members of the board will be faced with voting for or against the best interests of their own parties, since the McCarthy candidacy would presumably help President Ford and hurt Mr. Carter.

The Board of Elections is expected to rule on the McCarthy petitions Thursday. However, the case is likely to drag on longer, because the McCarthy forces and the state committee have already laid the legal groundwork for a court review of the board's decision.

The McCarthy forces are also prepared to challenge the constitutionality of the state's election law in Federal Court on the ground that it is too restrictive to independent candidates.

The McCarthy supporters in the state—a shadow of the vast "kiddie Korps" the former Senator led in the 1968 Presidential campaign—filed petitions containing 28,236 signatures to place him on the ballot. A minimum of 20,000 signatures are necessary, with at least a hundred from each of at least half the state's 39 Congressional Districts.

As of yesterday, the Board of Elections staff and tentatively disallowed 9,681 signatures, and about 3,000 more challenged signatures were still to be checked.

The signatures were questioned on the grounds that the signer or the signature collector was not registered, on the absence of Assembly and Election District identifications so that the registration could be checked, and on missing dates, incomplete petitions, illegible signatures and miscoupled signatures.

The McCarthy forces, represented by an Albany lawyer, John C. Rice, contend that many of the questioned signers and signature collectors registered by mail.

The importance of the challenge, which is sanctioned by the Carter campaign, is supported by the massive effort of the Democratic State Committee. It has involved keeping Board of Election offices in New York City open on Saturday and paying overtime to election workers for checking the validity of registrations.

Thorough Check

Signatures on the petitions were distributed to Democratic county organizations for a check against local registration rolls over the last two weeks. Hundreds of party workers have been involved in the tedious and painstaking work.

Even Democrats who have in the past criticized the state's restrictive election laws have applauded the intensive scrutiny of the McCarthy petitions.

William vanden Heuvel, who is co-chairman of the Carter campaign in the state and who bitterly criticized challenges of the Carter petitions in the state's Presidential primary by supporters of Senator Henry M. Jackson, said yesterday that he had a "different approach" now. Mr. McCarthy is not a serious candidate, he said, and his candidacy is "a very negative, destructive thing."

Lieut. Gov. Mary Anne Krupsak said the check of the McCarthy petitions was "nothing more than an obligation on the part of the checks and balances system to make certain that the general public is given the opportunity to vote for somebody who is legitimately before the electorate."

Party Bias Denied

Challenges of four other Presidential candidates—those of the Communist, Socialist Worker, Libertarian and Labor Parties—whose signature-gathering methods have often been questioned, have not been pressed because they were said not to be considered political threats.

The decision by the Board of Elections on Mr. McCarthy's petition could prove difficult for some commissioners, although two denied yesterday that they would be influenced by their party positions.

Acknowledging that they were appointed to represent their respective political parties, Stephen May, the chairman of the board and a Republican, nevertheless declared, "We have a higher responsibility to judge these cases according to the law and court decisions."

The other board members are Remo

J. Acito of the Bronx, a close associate of Patrick J. Cunningham, Democratic chairman of the Bronx; William H. McKeon of Auburn, a former Democratic state chairman, and Donald Rettalata, a Suffolk Republican. The board members are paid $25,000 annually for their part-time jobs.

Ford Flies to California for Debate and to Start Six-Day Campaign Trip

WASHINGTON, Oct. 4 (UPI)—President Ford, who faces Jimmy Carter Wednesday night in their second debate, flew to California today to start a six-day trip, his longest of the general election campaign.

The President also filmed a television commercial at a lithograph plant in a low-income section of Washington and held campaign strategy sessions with his staff before heading west.

Mr. Ford will visit California, Oklahoma and Texas. He will spend most of his time early in the week in San Francisco preparing for the foreign policy debate there with Mr. Carter.

On Thursday Mr. Ford goes to Los Angeles for a tour of the North American Rockwell plant where B-1 bombers are being built, and later will speak at the University of Southern California campus.

That night he joins Ronald Reagan for a Republican National Committee fundraiser and plans stops in Texas on Friday before returning to Washington the next day.

NEW YORK POLICE SET PROTESTS TODAY

Fighting Its Battle With Back Pay and Work No Talks Planned

PH B. TREASTER
The Benevolent Association of New York City remained at its picketing line today in their dispute over back pay, the union said that would resume at 11:30 a.m. The wives and children of the picketers were also picketing City Hall.

For the P.B.A., which has 10,000 members, 100 officers, added that they intended to picket the New York Times, The New York Post, The New York Daily News, The New York Daily Mirror and the Long Island Press in late afternoon.

The picketing, which started 11:30 a.m. yesterday, was interrupted yesterday out of the observance of Yom Kippur.

Mr. Weaving, president of the union, in an interview yesterday had twice told a representative of the newspaper that he was not interested in the picketing. He said that the city was reopening negotiations until it put forward a concrete proposal and could demonstrate that it had the support of the rank and file.

Mr. Weaving said that when the latest negotiations ended last Thursday, he had left with the impression that Mr. Weaving had accepted the terms of the agreement and believed it would be signed by his membership. He said a few hours later, however, he was informed that Mr. Cooper had raised the issue of the picketing, which had the support of the rank and file.

Mr. Weaving indicated that when he presented the agreement to the rank and file, he had not added his strong support for it, sensing his duty to give it their backing.

Mr. Weaving said that the police have required them to work 10 hours a day. It went into effect after the incidents reported since the beginning of the department's development.

Town Official Guilty of Lying to Grand Jury

The New York Times
J. Oct. 4—A Hempstead town official was found guilty in Federal court today of lying to a grand jury in forcing municipal workers to contribute 1 percent of their salaries to the Nassau County Republican Party.

Mr. Hempstead's deputy town manager was found guilty of conspiracy and water-gate by Judge John J. Conroy. He decided that evidence against him "leaves no escape route" and that the defendant was a participant in the solicitation of contributions from town employees.

Mr. Hempstead was the first town employee to be charged with the result of a long-running investigation by the United States Attorney in the Southern District of New York. He was charged with the political activities in Nassau County. He was found guilty of making a false statement to a special grand jury in July 1975 that was part of an investigation that came at the end of a grand jury trial in Federal District Court.

Giscard Begins Visit to Iran, Seeking a Concorde Market

President Valery Giscard d'Estaing of France arrived in Teheran yesterday on a combination official visit and sales trip. He flew into the Iranian capital aboard a sample of one line of French wares for which he seeks a market, a Concorde supersonic jetliner.
Shah Mohammed Reza Pahlavi, with whom Mr. Giscard hopes to strike deals for oil in exchange for arms, planes, and nuclear plant assistance, greeted the French leader at the airport. At the end of the four-day visit, the two heads of state are expected to announce a $1.2-billion agreement for the sale of two French nuclear power plants to Iran.
Mr. Giscard's visit came at a time when negotiations on the sale of eight American-made nuclear reactors to Iran were behind schedule.

One of the better known "Hollywood bombshells" of another day, Rita Hayworth, arrived in Buenos Aires just in time to be frightened thoroughly by a real bomb found outside her hotel. Miss Hayworth, in town for personal appearances, had entered her hotel only a few minutes before police demolition experts discovered and detonated the bomb. There was no indication that the device was connected with Miss Hayworth's visit.

In the latest fallout from the Prince Bernhard-Lockheed affair, the 65-year-old consort of Queen Juliana of The Netherlands yesterday resigned as chairman of the Bilderberg Conference, a private organization he founded 22 years ago "to promote trans-Atlantic cooperation." Previously, the prince resigned his defense and business posts, as well as the presidency of the World Wildlife Fund.

After he checked into Memorial Sloan-Kettering Cancer Center in New York yesterday, it was revealed that Senator Hubert H. Humphrey's surgeons will perform planned surgery Thursday. One of the physicians in attendance, Dr. Willet F. Whitmore, said the surgery probably would entail removal of the bladder in order to treat a cancer that has penetrated the muscle wall. Since Mr. Humphrey has undergone bladder examinations at six-month intervals for more than eight years, and was found free of cancer last April, the tumor is believed to be in an early, curable stage.

A small footnote to history: Otto and Regina Hapsburg celebrated their silver wedding anniversary Sunday in Mariazell, Austria. What made the festivities out of the ordinary was the fact that thousands of monarchists paid tribute to the quiet-living couple. Dr. Hapsburg, the son of Austria's last emperor, Karl, who abdicated in 1918, was once known as Archduke Otto of Hapsburg-Lothringen. Now 63 years old, he returned to Austria in 1972 after half a century in exile. In 1961 he had renounced all claims to the throne held by the Hapsburgs for 650 years.

"Mr. Smith" went back to Washington last weekend, more than 40 years after completion of the movie that gave his acting career one of its most important boosts. James Stewart, star of Frank Capra's now famous "Mr. Smith Goes to Washington" in 1939, was on hand for the opening of a Stewart film retrospective at the American Film Institute in the capital. Now 68 years old, the actor noted that none of the 29, of his 80-odd movies included in the retrospective had the sex-violence quotient of most current films. The latter, he said, leave him "disappointed and sort of annoyed."

Talk about bringing coals to Newcastle. Malcolm S. Forbes, owner of Forbes magazine, plans today to present the Gauguin Museum, in Papeete, Tahiti, an original oil painting by Paul Gauguin, the French post-Impressionist best known for his Tahitian period. The painting, part of the artist's pre-Tahitian work, and valued at $100,000, is "Les Enfants Dans la Rue" (The Children in the Street). The canvas will be on long-term loan to the Gauguin Museum, which owns no originals by Gauguin. It depicts the artist's wife and children, whom he later abandoned for his life in Tahiti and is believed to have been painted in Rouen circa 1883-84.

Down in Americus, Ga., Billy Carter was passing out cigars yesterday. The younger brother of Jimmy Carter, the Democratic Presidential candidate, became a father for the sixth time on Sunday when his wife, Sybil gave birth to an eight-pound, four-ounce boy, the couple's second son.

The police commissioner of Boston announced yesterday that he was resigning effective Nov. 15 to take a better-paying job as police chief of Montgomery County, Md., in suburban Washington. Commissioner Robert J. Garcia said his salary would go from $35,000 a year, as head of the 2,000-member Boston police force, to $45,000 as chief of the force of 900 in Montgomery County.

Muhammad Ali was ordered by a judge in Chicago not to dispose of a single penny of his $6 million winnings from his recent fight with Ken Norton, pending disposition of Khalifah Ali's divorce suit. The order came yesterday from Judge Robert L. Hunter. In her suit, filed Sept. 3, Mrs. Ali charged her husband with adultery and "extreme and repeated mental cruelty." The heavyweight champion has acknowledged in legal papers that he is the father of a child born to Veronica Porche, a frequent companion.

It was turnabout, if not exactly fair play, in a London courtroom, when the judge had "the book" thrown at him. Lord Justice Sir David Cairns was on the bench when a law book zoomed past his head. Identified as the book-flinger was Edward Caley Knowles, a litigant against British Railways, who was waiting for his case to be called. It was not explained why Mr. Knowles, who could be cited for contempt, threw the book at the judge. Justice Cairns seemed to remain calm; merely he adjourned the court for a few minutes. ALBIN KREBS

'Ann Beattie must be read...writing of a very high order, accommodating Hemingway's sense of pain, and Salinger's sense of betrayal into the form of literature.'

Ann Beattie's first novel and collection of short stories are both cause for celebration. Your first page into either book, and you'll know why. 'Chilly Scenes of Winter' will fascinate you with the story of a young man who dreams of the golden 60's as he faces his present 9 to 5 life and slips into a lunacy that'll provoke your laughter as well as pity. 'Distortions' nineteen stories continue along the thin line between the mundane and bizarre that Anne Beattie so perfectly draws.

Open both and take a good look... a good laugh... at life.

As readers of The New Yorker know, Ann Beattie is the best new writer to come down that particular pike... a writer for all audiences. The stories are a pleasure; the novel is a delight.

Lefkowitz Aide Is Said to Have Thrown Christmas Party With Predecessor's Leftover Bribe Money

BY BREASTED

An assistant attorney general Thursday on charges of bribe-receiving, once used party for his staff money from a former general's file, according to a source familiar with the case. The source, who said that he had been asked to do the party had been set by Martin Geruso, former general's office. Mr. Geruso was also receiving by the Manhattan District Attorney's office.

political corruption and official misconduct in connection with state consultant contracts and construction claims settlements.

"I can't remember who found the file," one person recalled, "but when Martin left, his files were distributed all over the office. And whoever got this file picked it up, and money fell out of it. The guy who found the money didn't know what to do with it, so he took it to Joe Hopkins, and he threw a Christmas party with it."

One of the persons interviewed said he had learned that members of the Attorney General's staff had discussed the Christmas party and the money found in Mr. Geruso's file with at least one witness in the grand jury investigation here. But members of the Manhattan District Attorney's office declined comment, saying they could not discuss details not mentioned in the indictments.

Mr. Hopkins declined to answer telephone messages left for him late yesterday.

The story of the office Christmas party was one of several new details about the wide-reaching grand jury investigation that were learned yesterday.

It was also learned that a study done by the State Department of Transportation on some of its highway construction claims settlements before the grand jury investigation began aroused suspicions about the role of a major law firm that represents many state contractors in the Court of Claims.

The sources said that the law firm was also under investigation by the Manhattan District Attorney's office, although that was not confirmed by officials in that office.

In addition, the political contributions of the Lipkins brothers, Sidney and Milton, are under scrutiny for possible ties to the Foster-Lipkin construction contracts on the Albany South Mall, the sources said. Milton Lipkin, who is vice president of the Broadway Maintenance Corporation, was acquitted here in 1971, after a Federal trial on charges that he lied to a grand jury investigating allegations that the company paid kickbacks on city contracts.

The Foster-Lipkin construction concern, in which Sidney Lipkin was a partner, received a construction claim settlement of over $9 million from the state in connection with work the company did on the Albany South Mall.

An unnamed subcontractor of Foster-Lipkin was mentioned numerous times in the Manhattan grand jury indictments as having paid bribes to Mr. Geruso to receive favorable treatment for Foster-Lipkin from him when he worked with the state's Office of General Services, handling construction claims on the Mall.

In other developments, Bernard Landers, the Syracuse accountant who was one of the key grand jury witnesses and whose September 1974 threats to disclose payments he made to Mr. Geruso and Mr. Hopkins were the subject of a meeting in Attorney General Louis J. Lefkowitz's office that month, confirmed published reports that he continued to do state work after Mr. Lefkowitz learned of the payments Mr. Landers had made to his aides.

Chess: True Then and True Now— The Bishop Pair Is Powerful

By ROBERT BYRNE

Although the striking power of the bishop pair was recognized by the brilliant American strategist Louis Paulsen in the mid-1850's, there are still games in which only one of the antagonists appreciates Paulsen's insight.

Position after 24 P-K4

That apparently was what happened in the encounter between Grandmaster Pal Benko and International Master James Sherwin in the eighth round of the United States Open Championship in Fairfax, Va. While Sherwin failed to take appropriate measures against the bishops, Benko gave a classical demonstration of their effectiveness.

After Benko's 4 P-Q3, the point of 4... B-N5 is diminished since 5 B-Q2 foils Black's plan of creating doubled pawns by... BxN. Sherwin might well have considered switching to an alternative defensive setup with 4... P-KN3 and 5... B-N2.

a mating attack at moves 17-22. He was not taken in by the trap 22 QxP; N-N5ch; 23 BxN, PxB (not 23... P-Q2; 24 BxPch, winning), which would have taken Black out of danger.

Benko's sharp pawn sacrifice 24 P-K4! could not be accepted because 24... P-Q2; 25 BxPch, NxB; 26 RxBch, RxB; 27 RxBch, K-R1; 28 R-N5ch, NxB; 29 QxP mates. After 24... Benko mobilized for the mating attack at moves 17-22. He was not taken in by the trap 22 QxP; N-N5ch; 23 BxN, PxB (not 23... P-Q2; 24 BxPch, winning), which would have taken Black out of danger.

Harlem News Service Is Planning To Survive by Going Commercial

By THOMAS A. JOHNSON

Officials of the Harlem-based Community News Service vowed yesterday to revive the organization with an "aggressive fund-raising campaign" and to try to turn the nonprofit service into a commercial news agency.

might be reorganized to insure its fiscal health and growth. One step, they said, would be to enlarge the board of directors to include persons more experienced in fund-raising. Another probable step, they said, would be to try to make the organization self supporting.

"We have been in deep trouble for two years," said Annette Samuels, the service's director, "reduced to functioning at a bare minimum, but none of us are walking away from C.N.S."

One aspect to be considered by the service officials is whether it should scrap its nonprofit status and create a commercial news service that could require the large financial investment in the purchase or rental of teletype and other electronics equipment.

The six-year-old organization that used black and Hispanic journalists to provide the major news organizations with coverage of the metropolitan area's poorer communities exhausted in Mid-August its third "terminal grant" provided by the Ford Foundation.

Often, the reports by C.N.S. journalists on community problems, frictions and new programs preceded those that were later reported by the major news organizations. Many journalists used the C.N.S. as their "first stop" before developing stories in city areas like Harlem, the Bedford-Stuyvesant section of Brooklyn and the South Bronx.

Bridge: New Book Explores Problems Facing Players in a Rubber

By ALAN TRUSCOTT

Perhaps eight of every nine players are happy to play rubber bridge or four-deal bridge in the privacy of their homes. It is, however, the conspicuous one-ninth of duplicate players, the tip of the iceberg, that receive most of the attention from writers on the game.

Without sufficient thought, South decided to play trumps immediately. He led to the ace, collecting the queen, and played the jack. East was now able to maneuver two spade ruffs to beat the contract. He took the heart king, led a spade, and after one ruff was able to play a club to reach his partner's hand for the second ruff.

Both sides were vulnerable. North-South had a part-score of 60. South West North East 3 ♣ Pass Pass Pass West led the diamond nine.

Three hearts ended the bidding, and in view of the 30 part-score this was a game contract. West would have done well with the lead of the spade ace, but preferred a neutral diamond. South, naturally, won in the dummy with the ace and threw a club loser.

A simpler alternative was to lead a club, either at the second trick or after taking the heart king. All these plays guarantee the contract against all three-two and four-one trump breaks unless one defender has K-Q-x of trumps combined with a singleton spade.

Andrew M. Greeley

Rabbi Marc H. Tannenbaum

and Rabbi Exchange Charges Anti-Catholicism Among Jews

By KENNETH A. BRIGGS

Father Greeley has become noted for his major studies of Catholicism, his championing of the cause of Catholic ethnic groups and his stinging criticisms of some secular and religious institutions. He has cooperated with Rabbi Tannenbaum often in recent years and each described the other as a friend before the controversy.

Anti-Catholic feelings, he says, "certainly are no worse among Jewish intellectuals than among most other non-Catholic intellectuals."

"Why write about Jewish anti-Catholicism? The answer is that I would not have done so if the American Jewish Committee had not asked me to present a paper at its meeting," the priest said.

"Why excerpt the talk for the editorial pages of The New York Times? Because the Times asked me to."

Rabbi Tannenbaum, who came under fire in the Jewish community for having made possible Father Greeley's May 16 speech, said the priest's latest attack demonstrated how "Andy Greeley shoots from the hip at practically everyone with whom he has some grievances," and he labeled the Greeley column "a demagogic tantrum."

According to the rabbi, the idea for the Greeley speech arose more than a year ago when the two men were attending a symposium in Cincinnati. Rabbi Tannenbaum said that Father Greeley asserted he had evidence that anti-Catholic bias among Jews was on the increase.

"An Angry Speech"

Following the invitation from the rabbi, Father Greeley submitted a draft of an address, which the priest recalls as "an angry speech." He says he received several suggestions from Rabbi Tannenbaum for revision, "all of which I followed."

Among the deletions was a sharp criticism of the American Catholic hierarchy. Rabbi Tannenbaum contends that many other guidelines were not followed, including his suggestion that Jews were making an effort to erase anti-Catholicism, a contention flatly denied in Father Greeley's speech.

Father Greeley asserted in his column that the controversy had threatened his job and the financing of his polling center.

In the interview, Father Greeley said the Ford Foundation, which underwrites the center, had renewed its grant. Rabbi Tannenbaum, meanwhile, denied that anyone from the American Jewish Committee had got in touch with the Ford Foundation or the research center.

"If he has a problem," Rabbi Tannenbaum said, "he has brought it on himself."

Father Greeley said his column had been prompted by Rabbi Tannenbaum's failure to respond to repeated appeals to consider the issue further. He was also aggrieved because he said he knew of two letters supporting his views that were not published by The Times.

The rabbi said that he had been on a three-month sabbatical and had not received Father Greeley's letters of appeal.

Rabbi Tannenbaum also said he planned to "call or write" the priest in hopes of "talking through this whole business to see if a more responsible way can be found."

One item for discussion could be a proposal for further research, submitted by Father Greeley after the May 16 speech. "I am a friend of the Jewish community," Father Greeley says. "I did not do this to pick a fight with Jews, but to do a favor for a friend."

Books of the Times

Whistling in the Dark

By ANATOLE BROVARD

FRIENDS AND LOVERS. By Robert Brain, 287 pages, Basic Books, $10.95.

In our society, says Robert Brain, friendship is the poor relation of romantic love. Romantic love is regarded as a feast and friendship mere bread and butter. We sacralize romantic or sensual love with marriage, but leave friendship to shift for itself, to survive as well as it can the encroachments of married "togetherness" and "team spirit." In all the world, according to "Friends and Lovers," only Western civilization is so sophisticated as to condescend to friendship, which, in Mr. Brain's words, "makes the world go round."

It is not only the invidious comparison with romantic love and sensual passion that impoverishes the idea of friendship in Western society. The fear of homosexuality, usually unfounded in true friendship, also plays a part. Furthermore, says Mr. Brain, friendship is seen as a homely, unexciting sentiment. It has none of the sound and fury of sex and romantic love.

What Mr. Brain proposes in "Friends and Lovers" is to look at these two contracts in Western society through the eyes of anthropology, which is his particular discipline. In this connection, he has some highly critical things to say about "amateur" anthropologists such as Robert Ardrey, whose "Territorial Imperative" became so dear to our hearts, and about Konrad Lorenz's glib extrapolations from the behavior of birds and animals.

We are subject, Mr. Brain says, to no such simple instinctive programming. It can be inferred from our nature or our faculties, however, that we do need to express and to extend our personalities. If we know only strangers, we become strangers to ourselves. The "complementarity and reciprocity" of true friendship are more replenishing, according to Mr. Brain, than the post coitum tristis of passionate love. Each sentiment has its place, and should not be confused with the other. While love and sex are great un-stagers, our sanity and our happiness may rest more firmly on a foundation of friendship.

New Structure Sought

In its own clumsy way, American society has attempted to provide new structures to supplant those we have destroyed. Singles bars and computerized dating are attempts to replace community as a source of contact. Here, as elsewhere, Mr. Brain is rather hard on sexual and romantic love and this is perhaps the one area in which he has little to say that is fresh, exhuming instead all the old arguments against the romantic agony without explaining why we remain in its thrall.

One wishes, too, that he might have given more prominence in his book to the increased potential for platonic male-female friendships as a result of a continuing emancipation of women and the consequent widening of their frames of reference. It might be expected that the new equality between men and women might also help friendship and sex to achieve peaceful coexistence, a possibility not given much space by Mr. Brain.

Without subscribing to "unisex" formulations, it should be easier now for men to form the kind of fundamental contact that Lionel Tiger calls "bonding" and that he restricted to men. It should not be difficult to show that man's historical relation to women is no less natural or organic. While friendships in one's own sex may be deeply reassuring, it is also conceivable that, in overstressing this kind of contact, we may be begging the question of our deep-seated androgyny. What men are accustomed to call the "otherness" of women may correspond to the unexplored parts of themselves for which many of them feel such a profound yearning. To a certain degree male bonding may be not only a blessed expression of faith and trust, but a form of whistling in the dark as well.

ent religious figures, the Greeley, a Catholic sociologist, and Rabbi Tannenbaum, a Jewish sociologist, have each other with irreconcilable dispute over anti-Catholicism.

It started last May when Rabbi Tannenbaum spoke at the annual meeting of the American Jewish Committee and there was "strong and Catholic feeling in the Jewish community," he said. Father Greeley's speech was on the Op-Ed page of The New York Times. A composite of his speech, reflecting over a year, appeared on July 1. The American Jewish Committee began to press Father Greeley's charge and submitted two studies. He called "dated and week after The Times' excellent, Rabbi Tannenbaum exerts about Father Greeley's in a radio broadcast.

Father Greeley said in his column that Rabbi Tannenbaum had attacked him personally. He was asked for a clarification by the American Jewish Committee. 's been slipping, all extent the slippage has been, in effect, a correction of un- realistic expectations is not clear. Cer- tainly, the candidate's vacillations and mistakes have contributed to his own slide—but these errors have been greatly magnified by the fact that for most of the campaign he has been the only real object of intense scrutiny by the press. Mr. Ford, at last taking ad- vantage of his incumbency, has mostly shielded himself from embarrassment in the White House. Thus, Mr. Carter rather than Mr. Ford suddenly looks like a bumbler—a situation which should be modified as the challenger becomes more sure-footed and the in- cumbent begins to venture more often into the open.

Mr. Carter may also be suffering from the sharply different kind of cam- paign—a development not yet suffi- ciently understood—resulting from Federal financing. Since there can be no private fund raising and since the subsidy is small by comparison to past Presidential campaign spending and will have to be devoted mostly to tele- vision expenditures, the effect is to limit the visibility and "hoops" asso- ciated with traditional campaigns. Democrats, in particular, have been dependent on campaign excitement to bring out their usual volunteer armies, and on both to get their vital low- income and minority-group voters to the polls on Election Day. Failure to do so in a year when voter apathy is supposed to be widespread anyway could be fatal to the Democrats.

Before the Earl Butz fiasco, at least, there was a sense of Ford "momen- tum" in the country. Again, it isn't clear how much of this is relative movement from the highs and lows of mid-summer, and how much of it re- flects real Ford gains—Mervin Field's national summary shows him taking the lead from Mr. Carter in only small states, with the rest of the shift from mid-summer going from Mr. Carter to undecided. And if momentum and the incumbency are still working for Mr. Ford, everything else—the economy, the Democratic majority, the dark leg- acy of Watergate, the desire for a change, for new energies to be un- dashed—seems still to be working for Jimmy Carter.

The remaining three debates and the last month of the campaign are unlikely to see significant change in that basic situation. They do provide ample opportunity for either candidate—particularly Mr. Carter, as the front- runner—to "blow it"; and they also offer time and occasion for either—again Mr. Carter has the best chance—to establish himself in a command- ing way with the undecided voters.

In fact, Mr. Carter may be in much the same position as that described by the jovial former Governor of Califor- nia, Edmund G. "Pat" Brown, when he was challenged by Richard Nixon in 1962. "Nixon can't beat me," Pat Brown told a group of Eastern report- ers. "Only I can beat myself—and I probably will." But he didn't, and Jimmy Carter needn't either.

the United States was reducing its troops here and there. There were also intimations that the Soviet military budget might be smaller in the next year. Mr. Rusk suggested that the two sides might proceed on a de facto basis, without the necessity of work- ing out the fine print of an agreement and being swamped in technicalities and complexities. Mr. Rusk said mili- tary expenditures could be limited through reciprocal action—each side would draw its own conclusions from the action of the other.

On Oct. 10, Mr. Kennedy told Mr. Gromyko that the United States had kept its troop level in Europe more or less constant—but that it expected to have fewer troops in Europe the following year. He suggested that the Soviet Union could also state its in- tentions on this subject.

While these discussions did not result in any explicit understanding, Premier Nikita S. Khrushchev said in a press interview at the end of the year that a "policy of mutual example" could be followed for force reductions, as well as for military budget cuts. Furthermore, the Russians advocated mutual-example force reductions in the 18-nation disarmament conference in Geneva at the session that began in January 1964.

In April, the United States an- nounced a small European troop re- duction—about 8,000 soldiers who had been sent to Germany as reinforce- ments during the Berlin crisis of 1961. Then during the summer the Russians withdrew a number of troops from East Germany; United States intelli- gence estimated that as many as 14,000 were withdrawn. No public an- nouncement was made of the Soviet withdrawal. But the two superpowers had slightly diminished the military confrontation in Europe.

The State Department was prepared at the time to deny that these with- draws were a "mutual example" measure. The United States apparently did not want to establish a pattern that might have created pressure for further reductions.

Toward the end of 1964, Mr. Gromyko again brought up the ques- tion of mutual-example reductions with Mr. Rusk. The Secretary of State referred to the United States reduc- tions and noted that the Soviet Union had apparently also reduced its forces in Europe. Mr. Rusk indicated that the prospect for further United States ac- tion was not promising.

The matter ended there. We were then becoming more and more deeply involved in Vietnam, which soon over- shadowed everything else.

Nyerere

By Kate Wenner

Some years back I worked for a year in a small communal farm in the south of Tanzania. From time to time, the President of the country, Julius K. Nyerere, would come down to see the progress of the villagers, to talk to them about their work, to discuss plans to "build the nation."

Whenever he came down to the village the schoolchildren would line up along the road to greet him, waving the long tree boughs they had col- lected from the forest and singing the national party song, "Oh-oo Tanu yajenga nchi!" ("The national party builds the nation!") They called him "Mwalimu," which means "teacher" in Swahili and indicates the highest re- spect. He would step out from his Land-Rover. He was a lively, precise, clear-eyed sort of man, ready from the moment he stepped out onto the ground to touch hands, talk and find out what was going on in the village.

One time when he arrived the school- children had just finished sewing new green uniforms, and when he saw them he threw back his head and laughed: "Now we'll call you green guards."

His faith was always in the children. Whenever he came he would ask to meet with Mohamedi and Cornel, the student prefects, and when they would sit waiting to hear what he had to tell them he would shake his head and say, "No, you ask the questions."

Mr. Nyerere caused an uproar among Government officials when he an- nounced the Arusha Declaration, which called for all Government lead- ers to give up any businesses or sec- ond houses they owned. "If we are to have a socialist Government," he de- clared, "our leaders must be socialists."

Once when Mr. Nyerere came to visit, the villagers gathered to meet with him outside the community hall. The schoolchildren must have known that Mohamedi had something he was planning to ask the President because they parted away from him leaving him to stand alone in the middle of the dirt clearing. Mohamedi was just 16, but it was clear to all who knew him that he would someday be one of his country's leaders.

"Mwalimu, last week you made a speech saying we didn't need money to build the nation. In our school we plant corn and cabbage so that we always have plenty to eat, but we can't wear corn. We can't make shoes of cabbage. How can we buy the things we need if we don't have money?"

Mr. Nyerere didn't answer for a moment and everyone was waiting to detect whether Mohamedi's question would be considered an impertinence. Then Mr. Nyerere sat forward and planted his hands on his knees. "That's right," Mohamedi. That's just what I said." He turned to a Government official who was sitting near him, a man who was obviously wealthier and better dressed than the villagers. "Send me a five-shilling note," he told him, and when the official hesitated, Mr. Nyerere poked fun: "Don't worry, my friend, you'll get your money back."

"See this, Mohamedi?" Mr. Nyerere waved the note in the air. "See this? It's money. So what? Can I eat it? Can I wear it? What good is it? It can't build the nation. People build a nation. What if there was nothing but this little bit of paper? What use would it be? We don't have to worry about find- ing little bits of paper. We have to get busy producing the things we need."

There had been a dispute going on between the villagers and an official at the local Government agricultural office. The official complained to Mr. Nyerere that the villagers were not planting their tobacco far enough apart—the one meter necessary to yield the best crop. Mr. Nyerere asked to be taken to the fields.

He walked quickly along the dirt road and the agricultural officer hur- ried to keep in step. The villagers fol- lowed close behind. At the fields, Mr. Nyerere asked to speak to Kalkenye, the oldest man in the village: "Are these your tobacco fields?" Kalkenye answered, "Yes, we are growing very fine tobacco." Mr. Nyerere fished in his pocket and retrieved a tape measure. He bent over, taking care not to disturb the young plants, and measured the distance from the stem to stem. Then he stood holding the tape at its measured length and asked the agri- cultural officer to read out what it said. "It's one meter," he said so softly that almost no one could hear. Mr. Nyerere asked him to repeat it again louder so that the villagers would know. The official spoke out: "The to- bacco is planted at one meter."

Mr. Nyerere nodded, put the tape measure in his pocket, then turned to walk back up the road to the village. All the people gathered behind and followed, walking slowly up the road to their homes, holding hands, talking quietly, silhouetted against an after- noon sky, in line behind a leader.

The Halftime Summary

By Russell Baker

At the halfway point in the Presi- dential campaign, here is the balance sheet on how the candidates stand: Statistics—President Ford appears to hold a slight lead in statistics. He is able to cite 17,273 statistics off the top of his head in 40 minutes. Whether he has any inside his head is uncer- tain. Mr. Carter can recite only 16,874 top-of-the-head statistics in the 40- minute test span, but his defenders say this is because his Southern drawl slows his delivery. Both candidates wear their statistics on the tops of their heads in obedience to regulations prescribed by the Secret Service.

Curtains—President Ford has re- fused to fire F.B.I. Director Clarence Kelley for having household curtains installed with Federal assistance. Mr. Carter says Mr. Kelley should have been fired, but qualifies the statement. Since Mr. Kelley's curtains are already up and President Ford hasn't fired him, Mr. Carter says, he doesn't know whether he will fire him or not if he. Mr. Carter, becomes President. The belief is that he will simply ask Mr. Kelley to take his curtains down.

Lust and Religion—Mr. Carter claims to have waged many struggles with lust and never to have lost a battle. Mr. Carter believes lust is a sin, but as a Baptist, he expects God to be forgiving if the sin is admitted and repented. He teaches in a Baptist Sunday School. Mr. Ford attends St. John's Episcopal Church. After "prayerful" consideration there on a typical Sunday morning, he returned to the White House and forgave Richard Nixon. He has still not for- mulated his position on lust. Students of the Nixon pardon believe he will reluctantly agree to excuse it in in- hibited lusters if persuaded that their inhibitions have made them suffer enough.

Compassion—No issue in the cam- paign has been harder fought than the vital compassion issue. Mr. Ford charges that Mr. Carter lacks com- passion because of his stand on Mr. Kelley's curtains. Broadly, the Ford position is that no man with com- passion would fire Mr. Kelley because of an all-too-human lapse over a few curtains. Mr. Carter has countered strongly and subtly with an intricate series of moves to show that he, not President Ford, is the man who deserves the compassion vote. Thus, when Congress sent the President a $56 billion bill for social services and the President vetoed it, Mr. Ford charged that the Democrats (Mr. Carter) were trying to trick him into look- ing uncompassionate. Mr. Carter emphasizes his personal claim to com- passion by insisting that the unem- ployed are people. Mr. Ford counters this by pointing out that the employed, who far outnumber the unemployed, are also people.

Presidentiality—The question of which man is more "Presidential" is believed by their advisers to be the most vital issue in the campaign. This is because both men, despite outward appearances, are running for Presi- dent. President Ford, having spent most of his life in Congress, is struggling to overcome the impression that he is "Congressional." To demon- strate that he is "Presidential," he stays in the White House and has photographers take pictures of him looking longingly at the Rose Garden.

Mr. Carter has fought back strongly to portray a Presidential image by showing fewer front teeth in his smile. Détente—President Ford is opposed to détente as a name for his foreign policy. While he supports his foreign policy, he also supports the Republi- can platform which denounces his foreign policy as immoral. Mr. Carter supports Mr. Ford's foreign policy almost entirely, but does not agree that it is immoral. He merely as- serts that it is run by big spenders with no respect for fiscal integrity and says he can run it cheaper. In their foreign-policy debate tomorrow night, Mr. Ford will presumably attack the immorality of his own foreign policy and put Mr. Carter in the awkward position of having to defend it.

Lobbyists—Mr. Carter admits that he has taken trips abroad at corporate expense, but says they were all right because, as Governor of Georgia, he was only drumming up business for his state. President Ford admits that corporate lobbyists have entertained him on golf outings, but says they were all right because he hardly ever talked business. The delicate question here is not whether talking business is good or bad, but whether the voters wouldn't feel more comfortable with a candidate who took bowling week- ends from lobbyists instead of golf outings and foreign trips.

Apathy—All the polls show intense voter interest in apathy. For this reason, the fiercest struggle between Mr. Ford and Mr. Carter has been to deter- mine which of them can come closest to total apathy. By working hard through the first half of the cam- paign to whittle his lead down to a mere 8 points in the Gallup Poll, Mr. Carter seems to have firm command of apathy at the moment. Mr. Ford, however, has so far been largely bottled up in the White House refus- ing to campaign. If he takes to the stump in these climactic weeks and shows himself to the nation, he could easily recoup all the apathy Mr. Car- ter has gained in the past month, and lose going away.

The growing food problem. What we're doing about it:

Much of the world lives on corn, soybeans and rice. Trouble is, there just isn't enough to go around.

What can we do? Monsanto has many ways to help produce more food per acre and more food per harvest. One way is called Lasso® herbicide, a weed control product that can help increase corn and soybean yields.

In response to the needs of rice-producing nations, we have developed Machete® herbicide for sale outside the United States. It works to increase the production of rice by reducing weed competition.

Naturally, there are many customers for products like these. And because there are, it not only means greater crop yields, but more manufacturing plants that we're building all over the world to meet this growing need. On Lasso alone, we're working to increase world-wide production by 50%.

REPORT ON 2 DEATHS CRITICIZES HOSPITAL

State Inquiry at Lincoln Indicates Too Few Nurses and Inadequate Facilities May Have Been Factors

By JOHN T. McQUISTON

Inadequate facilities and a shortage of nurses at the new Lincoln Hospital in the South Bronx may have contributed to the recent deaths of at least two patients there, an investigation by the State Health Department disclosed yesterday.

One patient bled to death of stab wounds, dying several hours after arriving at the hospital, apparently because no operating room was available, investigators concluded.

Another patient admitted to the hospital for stab wounds in the upper thighs the following day also bled to death, allegedly because of a lack of nursing personnel. Neither patient was identified.

"Others may also have died," according to a spokesman for Robert Whaleo, the State Health Commissioner, who demanded yesterday that the city's Health and Hospitals Corporation, which administers Lincoln Hospital, "immediately clear up the violations."

Holloman Comments

Dr. John L. S. Holloman Jr., the president of the Hospitals Corporation, said he had not yet been informed "of these allegations." However, he said he would call in the medical staff of the Albert Einstein College of Medicine and Montefiore Hospital, which supply Lincoln with professional services, "to determine if there is any factual basis for these allegations."

Dr. Holloman linked the developments at Lincoln Hospital with what he called the State Health Department's "arbitrary and capricious" refusal to issue an operating certificate to the corporation to open the new North Central Bronx Hospital.

"North Central has the best-equipped emergency room in the Bronx," said Dr. Holloman. "It would be tragic if this investigation reveals that these patients or any patients have died because of the state's refusal to permit us to open North Central."

Meanwhile, no progress was reported yesterday in the long-standing North Central Bronx Hospital controversy among state, city, private and municipal hospital officials. The state has held back the certificate, insisting that the corporation was not in a financial position to operate the new hospital efficiently.

The lack of financial resources, exacerbated by the city's fiscal crisis and the huge cuts in the budget of the Health and Hospitals Corporation, has already jeopardized Lincoln Hospital, according to recent charges by doctors and nurses there. They charged that inadequate facilities and lack of staff were leading to increased morbidity and recovery time among patients.

The modern $260 million hospital at 149th Street and Park Avenue was opened last spring to help replace the services that were provided in the Bronx by Fordham and Morrisania Hospitals. Both closed in July of this year.

State Health Department investigators, it was disclosed yesterday, also found unsanitary conditions, including fly infestation at Lincoln Hospital. Lighting in the operating room and other areas were found to be "insufficient," and patients, they said, could not be "effectively" monitored from nursing stations.

INTERNS SET TO STRIKE FOUR HOSPITALS TODAY

stein Hospital in the Bronx.

The strike would also affect three municipal hospitals, Jacobi in Brooklyn, Metropolitan in Manhattan and Bird S. Coler on Roosevelt Island, which have affiliation contracts with two of the voluntary institutions where strikes were planned.

Minimal Impact Expected

However, the impact was expected to be minimal at these hospitals since physicians on municipal contracts assigned to the voluntary institutions were being asked by the Committee on Interns and Residents to report to their municipal hospitals.

The committee had originally announced plans to strike 10 voluntary hospitals, but one by one during the afternoon and evening, individual units at six of the targeted hospitals reversed previous decisions and announced "postponement" of the planned strikes.

The first defection was the unit at the Beth Israel Medical Center in Manhattan, where strike plans were canceled after a late-afternoon meeting between chief residents and the hospital's general director, Dr. Ray E. Trussell.

Dr. David Kastenbaum, a senior resident in internal medicine and the vice president of the committee at Beth Israel said it was decided to postpone any strike action until after a ruling in a New York State Supreme Court case in which the committee is seeking renewed recognition by the state's Labor Relations Board.

Swayed by Letters

Other members of the Beth Israel staff said the unit had been swayed by a letter from Justice Abraham J. Gallinoff, who is hearing the case, urging them to take no action until after he ruled on whether he had jurisdiction over the matter.

After the decision by the Beth Israel unit, resident staff at Brooklyn Jewish Hospital and the four hospitals of the Catholic Medical Center in Brooklyn and Queens also abandoned plans to strike.

By mid-evening, Dr. Dobkin said that plans were still firm for strikes at the four hospitals with a total of 622 interns and residents.

The only issue in the dispute is recognition of the committee as bargaining agent by the hospitals. The planned strikes stem from a ruling by the National Labor Relations Board last March holding that interns and residents were mainly students, not hospital employees, and that the hospitals were thus not required to bargain with the committee.

Although some hospitals agreed to continue recognizing the union, a number that had previously signed contracts with the committee refused to negotiate new contracts replacing those that expired last Saturday.

Out of nowhere came a brash new contender.

When NEW TIMES started following Jimmy Carter, he was strictly nowhere... a name and face few people could even identify.

Since then, we like to think we've kept a sharper Carter watch than anybody. Way last winter, before the New Hampshire primary, we ran Marshall Frady's superlative piece on "The Democrats... In Search of a Hero." Even in that crowded field, we singled out Carter as the hardest runner in the race. "If simple motion were substance," we said, "Carter would be Charlemagne."

Later on, when Carter's chief speechwriter, Bob Shrum, became disillusioned and quit, we gave him a chance to air his suspicions and complaints in "You Can't Trust Jimmy Carter." That one had the candidate gnashing his famous teeth.

But the Carter smile returned in August (see the evidence in the picture above, with press secretary Jody Powell), when NEW TIMES published "Looking for Jimmy" by Robert Sam Anson. This special issue on Carter and the New South hit nerve ends everywhere and brought more praise than anything we've ever run.

It wasn't until several weeks later that Time and Newsweek got around to their special issues on the same subject.

First, get there first... Since NEW TIMES began three years ago, we've made a habit of getting there first. And then digging deeper.

We set out to be the kind of news magazine these strange, challenging new times demanded.

The Los Angeles Times has called us "brash, irreverent and surprisingly literate." The New York Times said we're "the magazine that has an adversary relationship with the world."

Butz's bombshell.

Just ask Earl Butz, he of the loose shoes and looser tongue. It was NEW TIMES that blew the whistle on Butz's most recent racial slur, thereby triggering President Ford's biggest embarrassment to date. The Butz scoop was just the latest in a long line of hard hitting investigative stories... We reopened the JFK assassination, sounded the first national alarm on those aerosol cans, went underground to interview Abbie Hoffman... We got to Bill and Emily Harris for an exclusive jail house interview, an interview which Prosecutor Browning credited with changing the course of the trial... We named the "ten dumbest congressmen," along with the King of Dumb... We were the first magazine to discover "est," and the first to draw a full and chilling portrait of its Führer, Werner Erhard.

It's happening.

But you get the idea. NEW TIMES, more than any other magazine, is plugged into how. It's the magazine of what's really happening, and that's a spectrum that includes love and music and lifestyles and all manner of rare new ideas.

So today, after just three years, NEW TIMES is really happening. Our circulation has grown from 100,000 to 300,000. Our ad pages so far this year are up 52%—the second best page gain of all magazines. Our ad revenues? Up 136%!

To understand the NEW TIMES phenomenon, do this: Read our third anniversary issue (pictured below). Really read it, including the precise foot-in-mouth language that brought the Secretary of Agriculture to his knees. It's on the newsstands today, and it's the biggest magazine we've ever published.

You may very well like what you see so much you'll want to subscribe. That's the reason for the coupon below, with its special half price offer. Mail it today. Get in on these new times.

Dr. J. L. S. Holloman Jr.

A Helping Hand for the Uneasy Shopper

By DEE WEDEMEYER

Jean Bradford bought a winter coat last week in less than five minutes. What's more, in the course of six hours, she bought two suits, four pants ensembles, a dress, skirt, blouse, several sweaters, a suede vest, a scarf and a handbag, all the purchases she will need for her winter wardrobe.

Mrs. Bradford—that is not her real name—said she was not a woman given to spending sprees, nor was she a clothes horse. She is the executive vice president of a real estate firm and she is short of time. Although she is comfortable discussing land deals at $200,000 an acre, she is less secure when it comes to hemlines and accessories. So she shops with Emily Cho, a fashion consultant.

Miss Cho is one of several women in New York who have built businesses as personal shoppers or fashion consultants, based on a need they say they saw created by rude salesclerks, crowded stores, confusing fashion trends, personal insecurities, time and career pressures and the expense of clothes, which, they say, has turned consulting from a luxury to a practical consideration for an increasing number of people.

A Confusion of Departments
"Merchandising is getting confusing now," said Miss Cho, who began her business, New Image, five years ago and now says she has 200 clients. "There's six departments where you can get a skirt. Six other departments where you get a jacket to match skirts. Service is not as good as it was. Women have time pressures."

"Take Castelbajac," said Gail Bloom, whose service is called Gayle Ltd., as she looked at a coat by the designer at Henri Bendel. "Half the public had never heard of him. But now he's the hottest designer in the city. So what is a person to do? They really need someone who is on top of things to channel their time and money."

The work is unusually personal, taking the consultants into closets where last year's fad hangs, an expensive mistake. Clients discuss their figure faults, both real and imagined, their hopes, fears, ambitions, and sometimes their spouses' hopes, fears, ambitions.

Amelia Fatt, another consultant, said she has found clients are sometimes seeking a fairy godmother. "They want a husband or a change in their lives," she said. "They want their lives to be filled with happiness. For many of them it's the beginning of getting a grasp on their lives. Many have told me they have gone on to get a new job or are doing exercises or are moving to a new apartment."

"You get very personal," said Mrs. Bloom. "It is like being a hairdresser. I have even done counseling on what to do with their lives. I had one girl—it was so sad. She had never had a date in her life. She went to work and came home. I said I thought she should enroll at the New School. Maybe she should spend a little money and take a vacation."

The consultants say many of the clients have careers, have just received a promotion, have just moved to New York State or are out-of-towners coming to New York to shop. Some of the consultants take male clients.

Not Just for the Rich

"I originally thought it was a service for very rich people but it's not," Mrs. Bloom said. "It's for all kinds of people. I even had a girl who was a telephone operator."

These consultants do not work on commission. They charge a flat fee for consultation and research, and charge clients, which, in the case of Miss Cho, is $45 for an initial consultation; $75 for researching the stores and reserving clothes; and $30 an hour for shopping with the client.

Mrs. Bradford has been shopping with Emily Cho for two years, beginning from the time she lost 20 pounds and needed almost everything new. She now shops only twice a year, except for small items.

"Whoa—I look in my closet, there are no mistakes, there are no impulse items," Mrs. Bradford said. "With Emily I accomplish more in four hours than I would in a week."

Because Mrs. Bradford is a regular client, there is no need for extensive consultation. Miss Cho has a file on her background, personal preferences, a list of all the purchases they have made together and photographs of some major purchases. The appointment is made by telephone, with Miss Cho asking such questions as: Has she changed sizes? Has her life changed significantly?

On the afternoon preceding the shopping trip, Miss Cho researched the stores, reserving items for her client to try.

In the course of the shopping day, Miss Cho acts as fashion advisor, confidante, and somewhat as a firm friend. "I think we should give this up—it's a luxury," she said of a $60 sweater as Mrs. Bradford approached her $1,500 budget. "O.K.," said Mrs. Bradford.

Miss Cho carried a scarf with which her client could cover her hair and makeup while trying on sweaters and extra belts. Sometimes she would remove her own accessories for the client to use for effect. After lunch she suggested Mrs. Bradford put on fresh makeup. Later in the day she provided candy to perk up her client.

Mrs. Bradford asked questions: "Emily, what kind of shoe should I wear with this?" A Gucci loafer she was told. "Emily, do I need boots with any of these outfits?" Not necessarily. "Emily, are chains still in?" "Your question should be: 'Are chains still right for me?'" was the answer.

Miss Cho has a firm way of saying, "Charge and send," which seemed to get action from salespeople. At Tape-measure, she persuaded a fitter to do alterations on a suit for $15, instead of $25.

Mrs. Bradford, who is in her early 40's, is 5 feet 7 inches tall and weighs 120 pounds, is proportioned like a Miss America contestant. Still, one of the things the work was evident as Youngs were married three years ago, an article in the New York Times described the couple's decision to leave New York and their lives since then.

New York life, and she moved to California, her emphatic "no!" It was move away from family money for damage to the car. It was only minor damage to drive the wrecked car to a modern, split-level month. What amazed Mrs. Young was that the apartment came with wall-to-wall carpeting and draperies and that they had the use of the pool at no extra charge.

Mr. Young's acquaintances in the real estate business convinced him that he couldn't afford not to buy a house because of the tax advantages. This was something that the Youngs had never dreamed of doing in New York.

Orange County, where the Youngs bought their house, is just below Los Angeles, for which it used to be a bedroom area. But, today, it is a rapidly developing industrial area where many electronics concerns have relocated. Mr. Young changed jobs and now works as a moving consultant for Apax Moving and Storage, which specializes in moving electronics equipment and computers.

The 20-year-old house the Youngs bought a year ago for $32,000, using a Veterans Administration loan, was in a residential section of Costa Mesa, in Orange County. But they soon found that living in an older house was not to their liking. Having lived in apartments, they were not used to the upkeep a house can require.

"From whatever time we got up in the morning until 6 o'clock in the evening we were working on the house," Mr. Young said with a look of exasperation. "When we didn't do that every weekend it looked lousy." It was time on the weekends that they would rather have spent at the beach in the summer or skiing in the winter in the mountains.

Recently, they decided to sell their house and purchase a condominium. They put the house on the market themselves at $49,900 and accepted an offer of $48,000. This represented a $16,000 profit, which they were able to use toward their $44,500 condominium. The condominium has 1,450 square feet of living space, which is 250 square feet more than the house had, as well as a two-car garage, which the house did not have.

The condominium, which is under construction, will have three bedrooms, a family room, living room, dining room and kitchen.

A Happier Environment
In addition to the recreation facilities that will be available to them, such as the swimming pool, the Youngs think they will enjoy their new environment more. Their present neighborhood is made up of predominantly older couples with teen-aged children. The condominium complex is occupied by families more their own ages. Eric Young is now 27 and his wife Betty is 25. Mrs. Young sees the condominium complex as a good place to raise a young child.

There are other things that the Youngs like about living on the West Coast. Mrs. Young, for example, saves on her wardrobe because she doesn't have to buy winter clothes.

But while there is a savings in the amount of clothing they need to buy, the price of clothing in California stores is very high. Thus the Youngs think nothing of taking $500 with them on vacation trips to New York, when visiting Mrs. Young's family, to buy clothes. They believe that by carefully buying clothes at various discount houses in New York, their $500 buys them $1,500 of equivalent clothing if they had gone to California stores.

Their grocery bills, however, are much less in California and there has been a big change in their pattern of dining out. Entrees at good restaurants in Newport Beach, Calif., average $8 to $9, and they find themselves dining out five to six times a month. They ate out seldom in New York.

They also find themselves traveling much more on weekends and taking greater advantage of cultural offerings on the West Coast than they did in New York. They considered it such a "hassle" to go into Manhattan from Brooklyn that they seldom saw a play, went to a movie or visited the museums. In contrast, on weekends in California they do not hesitate to drive a hundred miles to see a concert, drive to San Diego to the zoo or go to Mexico for the day.

The Youngs are boosters of the West Coast life. With youthful enthusiasm Mr. Young exclaimed, "I wish that when people are thinking of moving out here from New York, they would write me or call me. I would love to be able to keep people from making the mistakes I did, like selling our furniture, driving out here from New York and not really being prepared to leave."

Just getting psyched up for it is the hardest thing. You get out here and you're expecting something totally different from what you are going to find. It may be better than what you are expecting. But it is still different and you are not in the right frame of mind to make the most of it when you get here."

You never got a job because you have great legs.

spokesmen, is the musicians' demand for a guarantee of 11 weeks of work in addition to the regular opera season.

Ballet Situation Shifts
Under the contract that expired on Aug. 31, the City Opera guaranteed its orchestra 21 weeks of opera at the State Theater and two weeks of rehearsal, plus 11 weeks of ballet at the City Center on West 55th Street.

Until this year the 55th Street theater was under the control of the City Center of Music and Dance, the City Opera's parent organization. This season, however, control of the theater was taken over by a consortium of dance companies that included the American Ballet Theater and the Joffrey Ballet. These companies decided not to use the City Opera players, but to hire their own freelance musicians. Thus, in the words of the opera's managing director, John S. White, "These 11 weeks no longer exist."

Mr. White makes the point that City Opera last year was legally obligated to pay out "up to $30,000 for services not rendered." If the 11 weeks were guaranteed again under the next contract, he says, "the City Opera would have to pay out $65,525 for work not done because the American Ballet Theater, which formerly used some opera musicians, will not be performing at the State Theater this season."

'Real Issues' Are Listed

Mr. White says the management, to show good will, "pledged to our musicians this amount of $63,525 with the condition that it would be reduced by any extra work we could provide, such as television broadcasts, extra tour weeks over the established four weeks in the past, or possible work during six extra weeks in the State Theater." The managing director contends that this offer was rejected by the union. Spokesmen for the musicians say, however, that the management has refused to discuss any other issue until the 11-weeks' problem is settled.

The problem of the 11 guaranteed weeks, however, has been called a false issue by some musicians. In a broadside distributed by union members last week "the real issues" were listed as wages, hospitalization and pensions.

The paper, put out by the orchestra players' negotiating committee and Local 802, contended that the musicians' weekly wages have gone up only 20 percent in the last five years, while the Co-summer Pace Index for New York climbed 40 percent. It also said that, of 41 leading orchestras surveyed, the City Opera orchestras have "the worst hospitalization," and that while pensions in other American orchestras go as high as $8,000 a year, a City Opera player who retired this year "can expect to receive a pension of $720 a year."

'Something Better'

The committee pamphlet pointed out that the total budget of the City Opera in 1975-76 was $6.8 million and that the amount actually paid to nonworking musicians over the three years of the last contract "varied from a low of less than one-seventh of 1 percent (0.014) to a high of one-half of 1 percent (.005) of the budget for 1975-76."

A member of the committee, Lewis Waldeck, said yesterday that while the 11 weeks were "an issue, they are not the only issue." Mr. Waldeck added that the musicians realized that it was not possible for the City Opera to employ them year around, but that "something better than we have will have to be worked out."

The committee paper, signed by John Palanchian, the chairman, sums it up thus: "We are saying that if we can't be given parity with the other constituents of Lincoln Center on a yearly basis, we at least deserve parity on a weekly basis."

The City Opera orchestra is asking an increase of $100 a week in the minimum scale, according to Leonard Leibowitz, a lawyer for the musicians. The minimum under the expired contract was $340.

Differences Cited

As in the Philharmonic negotiations, the Chicago Symphony's new contract, calling for a $500 minimum in three years, has been injected into the City Opera dispute. Mr. Leibowitz cited the Chicago settlement in an interview last week.

During the Philharmonic's last contract negotiations, in 1973, a management spokesman insisted that "we can't allow any other orchestra to negotiate our contract." The Chicago Symphony, he pointed out, is one of only two major organizations in that city and does not have to compete, as the Philharmonic does, with many large groups for contributions.

Should the Philharmonic musicians negotiate a pay raise equal to Chicago's, the yearly cost to the Philharmonic would be well over half a million dollars.

Hitler, accompanied by Goering, during one of his triumphal processions. The ethical questions are timeless but the subject is particular.

Film Fete: 'Memory of Justice'

Ophuls Sets Standards for Monumental Documentaries

By VINCENT CANBY
Like "The Sorrow and the Pity," which examined the behavior of the French during the Nazi occupation, Marcel Ophuls' "The Memory of Justice" expands the possibilities of the documentary motion picture in such a way that all future films of this sort will be compared to it. "The Sorrow and the Pity" and "The Memory of Justice" have set standards and created expectations that even Mr. Ophuls himself may not always meet, as in "A Sense of Loss," his film about Northern Ireland, that was just as illusive as its subject. Mr. Ophuls doesn't deal in patry material.

"The Memory of Justice" is monumental, though not only because it goes on for a demanding 4 hours and 38 minutes, plus an intermission. It also marks off, explores, calls attention to and considers, tranquilly, without making easy judgments, one of the central issues of our time: collective versus individual responsibility.

The starting point is an evocation of the 1946-47 Nuremberg war crimes trials, through newsreels and interviews with surviving defendants, prosecutors, defending attorneys, and witnesses, that leads to a consideration of French tactics in the fight to keep Algeria and America in action in Vietnam.

"I go on the assumption," says Yehudi Menuhin early in the film, that everyone is guilty. But that sort of readiness to accept responsibility, simply by being a member of mankind, evades the truth that Mr. Ophuls seeks here.

The ethical questions are timeless but the subject is particular, and it's through the accumulation of particularities that "The Memory of Justice" makes its impact. More than 40 persons are interviewed by Mr. Ophuls, and a dozen more key figures are seen speaking for themselves in old newsreel footage.

Hermann Goering and Rudolf Hess whisper on the prisoners' bench in the Nuremberg courtroom. A United States Army psychiatrist recalls that their small talk in court could, indeed, be small, such as comparing the marks they'd received on their Army I.Q. tests.

An old farmer in Schleswig-Holstein remembers the Nazi era fondly. It was a time of law and order in the land. When reminded of the concentration camps and the mass murder of the Jews, he pauses, says "Oh, that's not right. That was something else." Gen. Telford Taylor discusses his role in preparing the Allied case at Nuremberg, setting precedents he still believes in, then talks about Vietnam and "the degeneration of standards under the pressure of war."

Adm. Karl Doenitz, to whom Hitler bequeathed the Third Reich in its death throes, today denies any knowledge of anything "dark" about Hitler, and describes as "politics" a speech in which he parroted the official anti-Semitic line.

Albert Speer, urbane, still handsome, has survived to become a kind of professional guilt-assumer. He confesses easily in best-selling books and to movie cameras, but is the confession any less genuine for sounding slick? I'm not sure. When he says, "Long before the Jews were killed, it was all expressed in my buildings," "The Memory of Justice" becomes the memory of guilt. That he's so glib needn't lessen the sincerity. After all, we can remember feeling pain but we don't again experience it as we remember. Perhaps some such protective device is at work in Speer.

The Program

Some people accept responsibility. They embrace it, like Mr. Speer. Others refuse to acknowledge anything but ignorance. Of the average German, one young German woman says of her parents' generation, "They deliberately didn't try to find out what was going on." Daniel L. Ellsberg, talking about "America's war criminals" of Vietnam, sounds almost as glib as Mr. Speer.

Others are accidental victims. An aging German actress recalls life as a Nazi exile in Hollywood. The widow of a German general tells how her husband committed suicide rather than sign the death sentence of a group of Catholic priests. Barbara Keating talks proudly, with great feeling, of her husband, who was killed in Vietnam, and Mr. and Mrs. Robert Ransom, with the same feeling, regret that they hadn't urged their son, who was also killed there, to refuse to serve.

There is absolutely no way to condense this material. Its effect is cumulative. People who are equally sincere totally disagree. Discussions of moral positions suddenly turn into narratives-within-narratives of the most personal sort, as when someone like Col. Anthony Herbert, now retired, recalls how he finally refused to be a part of a war he considered immoral. Individual responsibility still exists. It still counts.

Mr. Ophuls is very much a presence in "The Memory of Justice," sometimes on the screen as the interviewer, shaping the film by his commitment to search through the past to discover the present. Perhaps because he himself was an exile from Nazi Germany, the son of an exile (Max Ophuls), and is married to a German woman who (in the course of this film) recalls her membership in the Hitler youth, "The Memory of Justice" seems an especially personal, urgent work.

"The Memory of Justice" is long but it rivets the mind and the emotions so consistently that I can think of a dozen 90-minute movies far more difficult to endure. It will be shown at the New York Film Festival at Alice Tully Hall today at 8:30 P.M. and again Saturday at 12:30 P.M. It opens its commercial engagement at the Beekman Theater on Sunday.

The film which has been rated PG ("Parental Guidance Suggested"), contains German concentration camp footage of a sort that may well be beyond the comfortable comprehension of small children.

Contrasts Evident in Japanese-Soviet Movie

By RICHARD EDER

When Akira Kurosawa, the gifted Japanese director, takes the unusual step of making a movie in co-production with the Soviet film industry, and when the first half is delicate and haunting and the second half is numb and ponderous, it is hard not to jump to conclusions about who did what. To any event, "Dersu Uzala," which will be shown twice today at the Ziegfeld Theatre as part of the New York Film Festival, seems to be out so much co-produced as partitioned. Uoequality.

Essentially, "Dersu Uzala" is a Tolstojan parable about the encounter of the blind and deaf power of civilization with the perceiving and magical helplessness of nature. Set in the Asian forests of Imperial Russia around the turn of the century, it tells of the relationship between a military mapping expedition and an old Tungus trapper who acts as its guide. The soldiers sit in the wicker forest at night, uncomfortable, alien, scared. There is a rustle in the bushes and, mastering the temptation to flee, they grab the intruder. He is Dersu, a short, stocky, aging tribesman. He sits by the fire with them, and when a log crackles he speaks sharply to it. "Fire is a man," he tells them. "Water is a man, too." The captain, a sensitive intermediary between the brutal confidence of the soldier-survivors and the mystical trapper, hires him as guide. In a series of episodes, told flatly and with some obviousness, but with accumulating force, we see Dersu, through the captain's eyes, reveal his total communication with the world he lives in. Seeing footprints, he knows that men have been by two days before, and that they are Chinese. Seeing trees with the bark off, he predicts that they will find a shelter, and they do. When the party is about to leave the shelter, he insists on repairing the roof first: for anyone else who may come along. Dersu, marvelously played by Maxim Muirzak, a Soviet Asian, draws his wisdom from his complete openness to the natural world. The openness means vulnerability as well. The captain, whose relation to the old man is a growing reverence, discovers him one night, broke with grief by the fire. He is remembering his family, dead of smallpox; and he has no barriers against remembered pain—it is as real as a tree falling upon him.

In the climactic scene of this first part, Dersu and the captain go out to chart a frozen lake. Kurosawa films the cold as it has rarely, if ever, been filmed. It is a visible, red-eyed enemy, visibly terrifying. The two are lost and Dersu, seeing death, is in total fear. The captain has his civilized schooling to constrain him; he also has a compass. When the compass fails, though, Dersu saves them both.

Then this beautiful first part recedes. The detachment prepares to return to the city. Dersu declines the captain's offer to come with them. He would die in the city, he says, but as he trudges off through the snow we see he is older and is simply following his own road to death. The soldiers march down a railroad track, singing; Dersu reaches the top of a hill. Just before he crosses, he turns and waves. "Dersu!" the captain cries. "Captain!" Dersu calls back.

It is complete, or should be. If "Dersu Uzala" ended there it would be an odd marvel. But it goes on, repeating the cycle. The captain returns some years later, this time in the summer. He meets Dersu, who displays his powers more, but with diminishing effect. He has grown too old for the forest; finally he goes to the city, with the captain, can't adapt to it, and returns to the forest for the last time.

The episodes in this second part go on endlessly, loosely, obviously. They lack the revelations of the winter scenes and they do little but labor at length the points already made. They wreck the film's balance and make its achievements dull.

U.S. Publishers Are Cool to Soviet Exhibit Bid

Special to The New York Times
MOSCOW—A group of visiting American publishers has responded coolly to a Soviet invitation to exhibit their works at a new international book fair to be held in Moscow next September.

The proposal was made to a dozen executives from American publishing companies who last week ended a visit as guests of the Soviet State Committee for Publishing.

Several reasons were given for the American reluctance. First, some publishers said that it did not make economic sense to exhibit in a country where their books could not be freely sold. Robert L. Bernstein, director of Random House, said: "I think they forget that we are businessmen and not state exhibitors. Therefore, I think there will be very few who will shell out the money to come."

A second, touchier, issue involves Soviet controls over the exhibits. Boris Z. Stukalin, chairman of the State committee, told the visitors that the Moscow fair would be subject to Soviet law, which meant that no "anti-Soviet" books could be brought in. Because the category can apply to any book that Soviet customs officials consider ideologically unacceptable, some executives considered this tantamount to censorship.

The creation of a Moscow book fair appears motivated in part by a Soviet desire to show compliance with the Helsinki Agreement signed last year, which calls among other things for increased cultural exchange between East and West. The Kremlin has been upset by Western charges that it has not measured up to the document's other provisions on human rights.

Mostel Coming Back To Broadway in 'Fiddler'

Zero Mostel, who crested the role of Tevye in "Fiddler on the Roof" in 1964, will return to Broadway in the memorable musical, which starts a 10-week engagement at the Winter Garden on Dec. 22.

Mr. Mostel has been touring in the production in recent months, breaking house records in such cities as Los Angeles, Denver, St. Louis, Washington, Toronto, Philadelphia and Chicago.

KC AND THE SUNSHINE BAND ARE HEARD IN BLACK MUSIC

KC and the Sunshine Band are representative of two phenomena in popular music. One is the tendency of the music to self-correct, reverting to simple, danceable good times whenever things get too pretentious. The other is the apparently greater ease with which white practitioners of black music or, in this case, white band-leaders in basically black bands attain and sustain national success than black artists.

That said, it should be reported that KC and Company, who opened for Frankie Valli last weekend at Madison Square Garden, are very good at what they do—so good that the second of the two above propositions may be partly invalidated. The road may be somewhat easier, but it still takes talent to go all the way.

And all the way they've gone, with three No. 1 singles in the last year. Those records have been characterized by lyrics so minimal as to approach ritual, combined with a shuffling, syncopated rhythm that owes more to the Bahamas than to conventional soul or disco.

In live performance, at least in a cavern like the Garden, the clarity of the cross-rhythms is blurred by the acoustical murk. But KC and his musicians try to compensate with onstage energy and flashy costumes. The result is infectious indeed, choreographed enough to look slick but spontaneous enough to suggest the helpful illusion that everyone up there is having a jolly time.

GOING OUT Guide

LIKE IT IS the documentary is a film form that can be as infinitely varied and often more intriguing than the fiction film. "What's Happening?" is a series of new, controversial documentaries by independent film makers that, starting today, will be shown Tuesdays at the New York Public Library's Donnell Library Center, 20 West 53d Street, and at the Museum of Modern Art, right across the street at No. 11.

The 1976 films all deal with matters of public interest and concern. Almost every film runs less than an hour. The first, "Los Canadienses," by Albert Kish, is about Canadian volunteers who fought in the Spanish Civil War. Next week's film deals with natural childbirth; future works are about migrant farm workers, impressions of America in its Bicentennial, violence in the city.

The series, compiled by William Sloan, film librarian for the library system, is shown Tuesdays at noon at the Donnell (admission is free) and the same day, at 6 P.M., at the museum (Tuesday is pay-what-you-wish day). Information: 956-7284.

MABEL'S ROOM Mabel Mercer, thank heavens, shows no signs of slowing down. Miss Mercer, she with the magic touch of voice and gesture that has made her almost legendary, is past 75, but that is not keeping this supple singer from her trade at all. Tonight, Miss Mercer, with Jimmy Lyon on the piano, moves into Cleo, the sleek oen spot for dining and drinking at 1 Lincoln Plaza, opposite Lincoln Center at Broadway and 64th Street (724-6301). She will be there through Saturday with shows at 10 P.M. and midnight. She will be singing in the spacious back room that overlooks a garden and is quietly and comfortably furnished, in contrast to so many other rooms where talent flourishes in comparatively Spartan surroundings.

There's a $5 cover through Thursday; $6, Friday and Saturday. Supper, $5.95 to $7.95. Come in by way of the garden entrance on 63d Street.

TALKING PICTURES Lectures must surely rank high as a spectator sport because there are so many of them. And so many of them seem to be talks about art. At least, small surprise, that's the case at the Metropolitan Museum of Art, where the schedule is heavy with lectures. Today, for instance, there are three up there at $3 apiece and two that cost no more than admission to the museum, which is whatever you wish to pay.

At 11 A.M., William Dalzell speaks on Hogarth's paintings. At 2:30 P.M. Claude Marks talks of pyramids and pharaohs. At 5:30 P.M., Madeleine Pelner Cosmao addresses herself to beds, that is, beds as part of Medieval Works of Life and Art—all these in the Grace Rainey Rogers Auditorium. The free talks are gallery talks, one at 6 P.M. on the musical instruments in the museum's collection and the other at 8:30 on the Dutch genre of landscape paintings. These two meet in the great hall that is the main lobby. Information: 879-5512.

BUILDING BLOC The Institute for Architecture and Urban Studies, 8 West 40th Street (947-0765), believes that building is for people and it tries to mate the techniques of design and construction with humanist principles. It works with interns and students to develop projects and its role is largely research and education. It has become a forum at which the public can hear how the experts operate.

Today, the institute is beginning several ambitious series to this end. There are two programs a night, at 6 and 8 P.M., Mondays through Thursdays and each has eight or more weekly installments. Tonight, the sessions deal with New Modernism (Robert A. M. Stern is moderator) and "Drawing as Architecture" (a workshop for studying drawing as a way of thinking, with Giuliano Fiorentzoli). Others in the series deal with "Preoccupations of Architects and Critics" (Brendao Gill), "Aspects of the American Fifties" (Diana Agrest).

You must sign up for an entire series and the cost is $90 or $100, with no admission to single sessions.

The 38th season of the Poetry Center of the 292d Street Y.M.-Y.W.H.A. will begin Monday with an evening of poetry and music featuring Anthony Hecht and the pianist Frank Glazer, who will accompany Mr. Hecht in his readings. Among the poets to be heard at future readings are John Ashberry, Louis Simpson, Muriel Rukeyser, Robert Bly, Robert Lowell, Allan Ginsberg and Jean Valentine. Ms. Rukeyser and Mrs. Valentine, along with Audre Lord, will conduct three poetry workshops.

In addition a number of writers in the area of fiction and drama will also appear, and Ian Richardson, now starring on Broadway in "My Fair Lady," will read a sheaf of poems in a program called "Poetry in Performance."

Huntington Library Sets Building Plan
The Huntington Library of San Marino, Calif., which includes an art gallery and botanical gardens, has announced a $6 million development program.

It will include the construction of an entrance complex and wing to the library; renovation of the main exhibition hall; the construction of a parking facility so designed that the cars will be hidden by the trees that surround them, and renovation of the vacated space in the library to house resource material and to serve scholars. Construction will begin immediately. One fifth of the goal has already been reached, a spokesman for the library announced.

The Huntington, established in 1919 by Henry E. Huntington, is an internationally known research library. Its 500,000 books and 5 million manuscripts, many of great rarity, are primary source material for the history and literature of Britain and the United States. About 1,400 scholars use the library for research each year, and some 600,000 persons visit the exhibits.

Mr. Abraham recently won praise for his performance in the film of "The Ritz." Appearing with him in plays at the Cherry Lane are Jane Anderson, Michael Egan, Peter Riegert, Gina Rogers and Paul Sparer.

Ukrainian Museum, Devoted to Folk Art, Opens on 2d Ave.

By RITA REIF

The Ukrainian Museum, New York's newest showcase for folk art, opened Sunday on two floors of an imaginatively remodeled tenement at 203 Second Avenue (at 13th Street).

The museum, which is sponsored by the Ukrainian National Women's League of America Inc., has a collection of about 800 artifacts. Most of these crafts date to the late 19th or early 20th century and were assembled by the league in the Ukraine about 35 years ago. Since then, selections of the textiles, clothing, inlaid wood boxes, metal jewelry and and pipes and earth-ware bowls, plates and candlesticks have been exhibited in a traveling show in many parts of this country.

Now the ethnic designs have a permanent home here. Although the opening show is modest, including about 65 selections, it covers virtually all of the crafts represented in the collection.

As might be expected, weaving and embroidery selections are the most distinguished of the crafts on view. For the costumes of the Ukraine—the color-splashed aprons, the balloon-sleeved high-necked shirts, the geometric and floral-patterned waist bands and shawls—are as robust as the folk dances of that area.

Each design selected was researched by Oksana Irene Grabowicz, a student of ethnology and social anthropology who assembled the show. The catalogue pinpoints the regions where the materials were crafted and identifies the skills involved. But absent in and catalogue descriptions are explanations of why someone devised in the engine-red bridal wreath with Lincoln-pennylike Miss Grabowicz explained last week that 60 years ago, Ukrainians honored and copied even the commonest folk art for the first time. Those who are surprised in store, not which is the fact that resemble crafts from Rumania and even Mes that is not explained in exhibition.

The museum is open Saturdays and Sundays 5 and Fridays until 7 P.M. $1 for all except children age of 12, who see ad.

Giants and Jets Have Injuries at Defense and 0-4 Records in Commission

By MICHAEL KATZ
Special to The New York Times

PLEASANTVILLE, N. Y., Oct. 4—New Jersey gets a football team this week. That team will get a new defensive back this week. Neither development is expected to have much effect on the National Football League standings this season.

The Giants will take an 0-4 won-lost record into their new home Sunday when they play the Dallas Cowboys, one of the three superior N.F.L. teams that have a fine chance of making that 0-4 record 0-7.

It wasn't bad enough that the Giants, a losing team trying to judge how far it had rebuilt, were given a schedule with five straight 1975 playoff teams. Now they are injured.

And they are injured in a vulnerable place—the defensive backfield, where breakdowns mean touchdowns. The Giants' secondary has played well this season, giving up an average of only 154.5 yards a game. But yesterday, in the 27-21 loss to the Cardinals, the Giants also lost Bobby Brooks for the season.

Brooks, in his third year as a pro and second as a starter at the difficult left (usually the opposing team's strong side) cornerback position, suffered torn ligaments in his right knee yesterday when he was inadvertently tripped by Conrad Dobler of St. Louis. Brooks was operated on today and will be put on the injured-reserve list.

This opens a spot on the 43-man roster and the Giants were looking today for a cornerback.

A succession of injuries in the defensive backfield, starting in the preseason with Charlie Ford and Robert Giblin, who are now on injured reserve, have given the reserves a chance to give the Giants some depth at the position. It might mean something next year, when the home team hopes to be a contender at Giants Stadium. But have

Jets' Defense Draws Praise

Despite the fact that the New York Jets' defense is the team's most injured unit, it is the one that drew the most praise from Coach Lou Holtz Monday, in the wake of Sunday's 17-6 defeat by the San Francisco 49ers. The Jets now have an 0-4 record.

"The defense played very, very good," said Holtz about the unit that has given up only 16 points in the Jets' last two defeats. Ten of those came on Sunday, but the Jets' defense held the 49ers scoreless for almost three quarters.

"There is no doubt that the pass protection and the passing game needs work," said Holtz, an understatement in light of the fact that the two Jets quarterbacks, Joe Namath and Richard Todd, were sacked a total of six times.

Part of the reason for the Jets' problems with the 49ers was the fact that they went to the coast with only 37 players of a 43-man roster behind to nurse various injuries.

The four injured players are Billy Newsome, defense has a knee injury; Carl Johnson, defensive tackle, out with a string injury; and Rich Soyback, with a shoulder problem still questionable; also Barlum, wide receiver; Woods, tackle.

Winston Hill suffered an ankle Sunday, but he is expected to be back for the home game against the Buffalo Bills in Saturday.

Indians Sign Robinson a Managerial Pact

Oct. 4 (AP)—Frank Robinson today as manager of the Cleveland Indians despite the fact that he is part of both Robinson and the Indians' general manager pact.

manager is entrusted with running the ball club, and there is always give and take between the manager and general manager on any ball club. I know of no situation in baseball where disagreements don't occur, but there's never been a rift between Frank and I."

The general manager said Robinson showed improvement as a manager "in some areas, but I keep going back to the fact I thought player Robinson should have urged Manager Robinson to play him more. I thought that our ball club was better. I was disturbed by the number of one-run losses by our ball club that far exceeds the number any club should have."

In his 21-year major league playing career, Robinson hit 586 home runs and drove in 1,812 runs.

The Indians lost 32 of 57 one-run games. Robinson, one of the baseball's home-run and runs-batted-in leaders, sent himself to the plate only 67 times.

"I think if he had used himself more in certain situations," Seghi said of Robinson, "it could certainly have produced runs that could have changed some of those one-run games. But the very fact he's been rehired would indicate we have confidence in him. I think everybody learns by experience."

Frank Robinson reads new contract he signed to manage the Cleveland Indians for another year with Phil Seghi, the team's general manager.

Sensational, 10-1, Steals Show From Mrs. Warren in Frizette

By STEVE CADY

Mrs. Warren's coronation as queen of thoroughbred racing's 2-year-old fillies will have to await further deliberations.

With a chance to nail down the title in yesterday's $107,800 Frizette Stakes at Belmont Park, the aptly named daughter of Hall to Reason and Easy Virtue lost points in the polls by finishing third while a lesser-regarded stablemate came home in front.

Sensational, an erratic filly ridden by Jorge Velasquez, took the one-mile event by 1 1/4 lengths as the 10-1 third choice in a field of seven. The runner-up, Northern Sea, went off as a surprising 4-5 favorite and finished three lengths ahead of Mrs. Warren, the 11-10 second choice.

Until recently, Sensational and Mrs. Warren would have been coupled in the wagering as a parimutuel entry, since both are trained by Woody Stephens. But a new ruling permits horses with different owners to run as separate betting entities, even though they have the same trainer. Sensational is owned by Mill House, Mrs. Warren by Mrs. Taylor Hardin.

Sensational, Jorge Velasquez up, leads field to win the Frizette at Belmont.

Special to The New York Times

KANSAS CITY, Oct. 4—Catfish Hunter hates to pitch in Kansas City because he knows his oemcis will be waiting for him. That nemesis is not Amos Otis, George Brett, John Mayberry or any other Royal batter. It's George Toma.

Toma's name won't be found in any box score or baseball almanac. He does his damage with a set of gardening tools, not with a bat. Toma is the head groundskeeper at Royals Stadium. He and Hunter are friends from many years ago. They were on the same side of the fence when Hunter pitched for the old Kansas City Athletics in Municipal Stadium. But now things have changed. Hunter will be pitching for the New York Yankees in the playoffs against the Royals.

"Everytime I go out there he has two inches of mud on the mound," Hunter said. "He really knows how to make it tough. When you combine that artificial surface with the wet mound, it's almost impossible to pitch there."

Hunter's career won-lost record against the Royals is 15-11. But at Royals Stadium, Hunter is 5-5, and 2-4 since 1972. In his home parks against the Royals, he has been 10-6, and 4-4 since 1972.

In the last four years, while winning only three of seven decisions in Kansas City, Hunter has won 86 and lost 46 overall.

Despite all this, Toma and Hunter have remained friends. When they get together, Toma is the teacher and Hunter the student.

"Cat has a big farm in North Carolina and is really interested in some of the techniques I use in gardening," Toma said. "It's really rare to see a millionaire doing his own gardening."

When Hunter pitched in Kansas City, he was part of the grounds crew under Toma.

"Before the game," Hunter recalled, "I would go out to the mound and doctor up the pitching surface to my liking. Now George tells me, 'You don't pitch for us anymore, you're the enemy.'"

Hunter doesn't begrudge Toma because of his lack of success pitching in Kansas City. "I can't fault the guy for doing his job," Hunter said.

Toma remembers well the days Hunter pitched for Charles O. Finley's old Athletics in Kansas City. "In his early years," Toma said, "he gave me some of the credit for his success. He relies a great deal on the shape and condition of the mound. I did my best to help him when he was here, now I do whatever I can to hinder him."

Toma is so respected as a groundskeeper that he has worked every National Football League Super Bowl. Now it's the baseball playoffs, starting here Saturday, and when Hunter pitches in Game 1, Toma's presence may be an unseen factor.

Inquiry on McRae's Change

The American League, at the request of the baseball commissioner's office, is investigating the play at Kansas City on Sunday that enabled the Royals' George Brett to defeat his teammate, Hal McRae, for the league batting title, .333 to .332.

The hit that won the title for Brett was an inside-the-park home run in the ninth inning that dropped in front of the Minnesota Twins' left fielder, Steve Brye, and bounced over his head.

Brett and McRae, thinking Brye could have caught the ball, were disturbed by the incident, and McRae believed that the Twins' manager, Gene Mauch, had deliberately ordered Brye to let Brett's fly ball drop. McRae, a hack, thought racial feelings were a motivating factor behind the incident. Mauch and Brye maintained the ball was misjudged.

They're Still Friends

"Catfish hates to come here and pitch," Toma said earlier in the season, after one of Hunter's rare victories at Royals Stadium. "I wasn't ready for him when he posted his win this season, but I'll be ready when the playoffs start."

What's the secret of the 48-year-old Toma's mastery over Hunter? A good memory and some tools.

"He doesn't like the mound hard," Toma said. "I know this because when he used to pitch here [with the old Athletics] I would dig a hole and make the slope of the mound soft. Now when he comes into town I make it as uncomfortable as the rules permit."

Toma's directions to the groundskeeper who handles the pitcher's mound are quite clear when Hunter is to start.

"I tell my man, 'Make the slope as hard as a rock.' He does what I tell him," Toma said.

Mystery Unraveled

Offtrack bettors operating without benefit of an official program found a real mystery horse in the fourth race.

The horse, a 2-year-old named Legend, showed no owner or trainer in his Daily Racing Form past-performance data for the first start of his career. Both categories were listed as "unknown." Four slow workouts offered the only clue to the colt's ability, or lack of it.

In the program, ontrack customers learned that Legend's owner was Edgar Zantker and his trainer Jim Conway. Legend then proceeded to identify himself as a loser by finishing 10th in an 11-horse field at odds of 25-1.

Dave Anderson

When the legendary middleweight, Stanley Ketchel, was on display in his coffin, a wit of that era suggested, "Start counting 10 over him and he'll get up." Now that the legendary heavyweight, Muhammad Ali, is in retirement, show him a close-up of George Foreman and he'll announce a comeback.

Not that Muhammad Ali has really retired. He's merely taking a leave of absence for a week or a month or maybe a year, whatever is necessary for the price to escalate to perhaps $10 million for an Ali-Foreman title bout. His phrasing in Istanbul was familiar. "I declare," Ali said, "that I am quitting boxing as of now." As of now. He used the same phrase in Kuala Lumpur last year a week before he assaulted an English statue named Joe Bugner for 15 rounds. "As of now," he said that day in Malaysia, "this is the last time you will see Muhammad Ali in a fight." But within a week Ali agreed to meet Joe Frazier in the Thrilla in Manila and he was seen in three more title bouts, plus a farce with a Japanese wrestler, before his controversial triumph over Ken Norton at Yankee Stadium last week.

But the Kuala Lumpur scene is important because it shows that Ali may never retire as long as another heavyweight is tormenting him, as long as the promoter is willing to pay him millions, as long as his idolators nurture his ego.

The Close-Up of Frazier

That steaming day in Malaysia, he was sitting on a curved couch in the Kuala Lumpur Hilton and saying in a subdued voice, "Horses get old, cars get old, the pyramids of Egypt are crumbling. I want to retire while I'm still on top." In a theatrical touch, he added that he would announce his retirement officially during the closed-circuit TV of the Bugner bout and name his successor as champion—Frazier, Norton or Foreman. "In my book," he proclaimed, "I have a right to name my successor." Then he went upstairs to his suite.

"I gotta look at a videotape of the Bugner-Frazier fight," he explained. "I gotta scout Bugner."

Sprawled on a big, soft couch, Ali soon was watching his TV set when a close-up of Joe Frazier appeared.

"Ah! he ugly!" Ali muttered and soon he was growling, "When I fight Joe Frazier, I'll kill him."

Ali's retirement had lasted half an hour. At the time Joe Frazier was the torment of his life but now George Foreman is. Show him a close-up of George Foreman and Ali will be growling, "When I fight George Foreman..." But even in Malaysia he seemed fascinated by the idea of retirement in order to create a comeback.

"I can't fight forever but a comeback would be fun," he said that day. "I can hear it now, 'The Champ is comin' back.'"

Show Ali a Close-Up of Foreman

And now, a comeback would create the drama that Ali thrives on. It also would create an excuse. "You know," he keeps saying, "I can knock out George Foreman every time I fight him." Not the next time. When he does meet Foreman again, Ali will be 35 years old, his reflexes that much slower. Already there is talk among Ali's entourage that Herbert Muhammad, his manager, must be close by at ringside in order to throw in the towel personally if Foreman has battered Ali helpless against the ropes. Ali and his Black Muslim followers might not accept a surrender from anyone except Herbert, the brother of Wallace D. Muhammad, the Black Muslims' spiritual leader.

But a comeback would provide Ali with an excuse if he's wrecked by Foreman—he wasn't tuned up, he didn't have enough time to train.

And a comeback would increase the drama and the dollars. For all the millions that Ali has earned, he has spent millions. Wallace D. Muhammad acknowledges that Ali spent the purse from the Norton bout "before he got it." After taxes and expenses for his entourage, Ali probably will keep perhaps $2 million of his $6 million guarantee.

Norton's Mistake

Over the weekend, TV replays of the 15th round by CBS showed why Ali won last week. For all the tears shed for Ken Norton, the challenger has only himself and his corner to blame.

Norton made the mistake of assuming that he didn't need to win the final round. As the replays showed, he stood around for more than a minute without throwing a punch while Ali jabbed. Ali was not doing much but he was doing something. Norton was doing nothing. In the final seconds Norton swarmed over Ali but too late to prevent Ali from winning the decisive round on each of the official's scorecards. On my scorecard, too.

"You never tell a fighter he's winning," Ali's trainer, Angelo Dundee, said last week. "You're always losing until you win."

"I thought I was ahead," Norton said, "but after a while in the 15th, I thought about Los Angeles and I applied more pressure."

Ken Norton should have thought about Los Angeles sooner. He lost a 12-round split decision to Ali in Los Angeles three years ago because he did not do enough in the final round. If he had won that 12th round, he would have earned a majority decision for his second triumph over Ali in six months. Ali instead went on to dethrone George Foreman a year later and he's still the champion, primarily because Ken Norton did not remember what happened in Los Angeles until it was too late.

As for Ali's leave of absence, show him a close-up of George Foreman and he'll announce a comeback.

Tarkenton on Sideline At Viking-Steeler Game

By WILLIAM N. WALLACE

Special to The New York Times

BLOOMINGTON, Minn., Oct. 4—Francis Tarkenton failed to answer the starting call tonight as the Minnesota Vikings took on the Pittsburgh Steelers at Metropolitan Stadium here, the first time in 16 seasons that an injury had kept the all-pro quarterback on the sideline when the game began. Bob Lee replaced Tarkenton, whose problems were bruised ribs after having been hit by an errant knee in last week's game against Detroit.

The Vikings led, 14-6, early in the fourth quarter.

Tarkenton, whose life in the National Football League began in 1961, when the Vikings also came into the N.F.L., had started 211 of 213 games. The exceptions were when he was benched late in losing seasons, the first time by Coach Norm Van Brocklin here with the Vikings and the second time in New York as a Giant under Coach Alex Webster.

Tonight, Lee, a sometime regular with Minnesota and Atlanta in previous years, was intercepted on his second pass, and this led to a score by the Steelers in the opening quarter. Lee forced a pass for Sammie White into a crowd of defenders, and Jack Lambert, a Pittsburgh linebacker, made the interception at the Viking 25-yard line and returned it to the 15.

Bradshaw Throws for Score

Five plays later Terry Bradshaw completed a pass from the 1 to Bennie Cunoingham, the second tight end, for a Pittsburgh touchdown. But the conversion kick by Roy Gerela was no good, partly blocked by Nate Allen. It was Allen's fourth block of a placement this season.

An interception by Allen of a Bradshaw pass set up a Minnesota touchdown in the second quarter. Allen was tackled at the Steelers' 35 after having stolen the pass, and Chuck Foreman scored on an impressive off-tackle smash of 8 yards. Fred Cox's conversion kick was good, so the Vikings led, 7-6.

Minnesota had another chance to score before halftime, but Cox's 44-yard field-goal attempt was wide.

The tempo of an even game between two of pro football's best outfits increased in the third period as turnovers became vital. A fumble by Lee, recovered by L. C. Greenwood at the Minnesota 41, gave Pittsburgh a chance. There were few chances in this game between two of the great defenses in the N.F.L.

The Steelers moved to the Viking 22, but Gerela's field-goal attempt was blocked by Carl Eller, the seasoned defensive end for Minnesota.

Another Viking fumble, by Foreman at the Minnesota 22, set up Pittsburgh once more.

No good. A scrambling Bradshaw tried a pass that was tipped by Eller and intercepted by Jeff Siemon, a Viking linebacker, at the Minnesota 20. This was the sixth turnover of the game, three for each side, as the score remained 7-6 for Minnesota.

Romano Is Lauded as Pitt's Defensive Star

By GORDON S. WHITE Jr.
An outstanding middle guard on defense usually get the best of an outstanding offensive center, according to Johnny Majors, the Pittsburgh coach. That was one of many aspects of undefeated Pitt's 44-31 victory over Duke last Saturday that satisfied this Tennessee country gentleman. The Sports Panthers' middle guard notes Al Romano, outmaneuvered Duke's strong center, Billy Bryan, most of the time.
Majors said: "Romano definitely whipped the hell out of the kid. It was a classic meeting of middle guard and center. And usually the middle guard is playing where he is because he is strong, big and agile. A center can be big and strong but centers just aren't as agile as a fine middle guard. And that's what happened."
Romano, one of the best middle guards in the nation, broke through regularly to disrupt Duke's plays. He would back off and play "soft" against Bryan's charge to plug holes on a drive up the middle. His performance earned him a Pitt coaching grade of 38 points. The grades are based on 3 points for a tackle, 2 for a tackle assist, 5 for causing a fumble, 5 for recovering a fumble and 10 for sacking the quarterback. Points are deducted for missing a tackle. Romano has had better days, such as his 45-pointer in the opening victory over Notre Dame four weeks ago. Bryan probably had something to do with his lower grade on Saturday.

"The Romano-Bryan confrontation does not detract from Bryan's abilities," Majors said. "He's a great center. He's a great center. He's a great center." Romano was the "middle guard" who whipped the hell out of the Georgia Tech center, Leo Tierney three weeks ago. Bryan and Tierney are among the top half-dozen centers in college football.
Joe Paterno is not offering any excuses for his Penn State team, which is off to its worst start, with three losses in four games, since he became head coach in 1966. And now the Nittany Lions have lost their starting quarterback John Andrews, for most of the season. He suffered a sprained right shoulder on the second play of Saturday's defeat to Kentucky. Chuck Fusina, a sophomore, will start against Army this week. Behind Fusina is another sophomore, Doug Hostetler.
Tony Capozzoli, the freshman quarterback from Oyster Bay, L.I., will have to wait his turn. Although Capozzoli was a high school sensation, Paterno said he did not want to rush Capozzoli. The freshman was involved in an accident just before the season started. Riding his bicycle on campus, he was struck by a car and dragged nearly 100 feet. He suffered many bruises and scrapes but fortunately did not break any bones.

Nate Toran, Rutgers's fine defensive end, was named Eastern College Athletic Conference defensive player of the week for his efforts in the victory over Cornell. He was in on 11 tackles and helped contain Cornell to 57 yards rushing. But he lost his favorite sidekick, John Alexander, Rutgers's strong left defensive tackle. Alexander was injured during the game and may miss this week's game against Connecticut. Normally, Toran plays on the left side of the Rutgers defense, which presents a four-man line at times and a five-man line at other times. Toran also slips over to the right defensive end spot once in a while. One opposing coach said, "Toran goes over to the right six or seven times a game." Frank Burns, the Rutgers coach, said, "Oh, he's on the right 50 percent of the time." But then Burns doesn't want the opposition to know.
Burns yesterday complained about the National Collegiate Athletic Association rule that virtually prohibits major or Division I football teams from scouting an opponent. Division II or Division III teams are permitted to scout an opponent. The rule was established as a cost-saving device. Connecticut, a Division II team, scouted Rutgers last week while Scarlet coaches did not watch Connecticut play. Rutgers played Bucknell, another Division II team, 10 days ago without being able to scout the Bisons the previous week. But Bucknell had nine coaches watching Rutgers play Navy, according to Burns. The N.C.A.A. rule states that a Division I college cannot pay expenses or salary for a coach to scout an opponent. And there aren't too many volunteers for scouting trips on that basis.

World Series After Dark: Nightmare or Dream Come True?

ay, Oct. 17, the second game of the World Series will be played at night for the first time. A weekend game has been scheduled television people call "prime time" World Series games played at night since 1971, at some of the league championship games also will be televised at night.
good or bad for baseball, the sense of competition in the business that stages it? Is it good or bad for fans? Is it good or bad for television in the background?

Three Rivers Stadium in Pittsburgh lit up for the first World Series night game on Oct. 13, 1971.

Background
ern World Series began in the first 397 games were daylight until Game No. 4 of the Series, which took place Tuesday night in Pittsburgh. The games had been played since 1935, and had become a norm by the mid-1950's; considered unthinkable—and to have a special event World Series held at night, every World Series becomes an automatic sellout, as no point in seeking more fans. But the potential television at night was obviously that in the daytime, when they are at work, and by 1970 television income for the Series greatly exceeded the gate receipts. experience with the mid-1970's game paved the way. The game, played at Anaheim, started at 4:15 P.M. local time. It lasted 15 innings—which had television screens in the past, all through the evening. In the past year, played indoors at the Astrodome, it was the evening, and all subsequent Star Games have been at night.
only that one World Series game was played at night. The new pattern was adopted on Saturdays and Sundays, but on Tuesdays, Wednesdays, and Thursdays, the game is off for travel.
daylight has been added, the first Sunday of this series. If a seventh game is ordinary scheduling, it is for Sunday afternoon. Oct. 18, however, rain in Boston, the schedule and for the seventh and deciding game at night, on Wednesday.

Last year's Game No. 2, on a Sunday afternoon in Boston, had "only" 43 million viewers—while millions more, of course, were watching football games.
And that's really the heart of the present decision. Commissioner Bowie Kuhn speaks of "giving more people an opportunity to see the game," which may apply to a weekday, but certainly not to a Sunday—and certainly no more to a Sunday than a Saturday. But NBC, which is televising the World Series, has no other major sports program on Saturday; it does have a commitment to pro football on Sunday. By having the game on Sunday night, television and baseball don't have to share a sports audience with football.
In the television business, rating points are the name of the game, so obviously a higher rating is better and means higher prices for commercials. In baseball, higher television income may mean more money can be asked for the broadcasting rights in the next negotiations, and, presumably, more television viewers will mean more potential ticket-buyers in the future.

atmosphere that intruded upon daily activities at work and at school. Television ratings (which do not measure hotel, bar, portable or other non-home sets) may not accurately reflect the total impact of an event, even if they accurately measure home sets in use. A day game is something "special" happening in the world; a night game is just another form of entertainment.
3. By accepting the rating philosophy, and scheduling its games for television convenience, baseball allows itself to become merely a tool in the rating war among the networks, and a vehicle for promotional announcements for non-baseball events. Rival networks must mount major competitive efforts in prime time, and it is a fact of television history that prime-time shows last only a few years, no matter how popular they are over a particular period.
4. Sunday night games, in particular, will cut into a significant segment of the sports audience: children of school age. Yet these are, it is generally accepted, the future ticket-buyers and loyal followers. Add this to the television-promotion element that urges a viewer to stay home and watch the next television special—whatever it may be—instead of going out to a ball park or anywhere else, and you may be creating a situation where today's ratings will reduce ticket sales a few years down the road.

The Outlook
Baseball authorities, from Commissioner Kuhn on down the line, are completely sold on the virtues of higher ratings, and within a few years all playoff and World Series games will be scheduled at night, except when a television network, for reasons of its own, requires a day game.

Opponents

Arguments in favor of World Series games are contained in... much revered in the television and television and widely accepted by baseball fans is better... ratings are much higher... games for day... All-Star Game, which was with a geographical assist, mated television audience... The Astrodome game the... are drew, according to the million. Last year's final game drew 76 million...

The Opponents

Those who oppose night World Series games use arguments that sound more idealistic, but also take a different view of economic benefits. They feel that the immediate rise in rating points is an illusory gain in the long run, that it creates television fans rather than baseball fans, and that some of baseball's special qualities are lost in the process. These arguments are:
1. Ultimate "championship" games should be played under the best possible conditions, and most players feel they see the ball better in natural light than in even the best-lit ball park. And commitment to prime time in the Eastern time zone means Western games must be played in twilight, when visibility is at its worst.
2. When the World Series was an all-daytime affair, it created a festival which the tracks are located and less income to the tracks and the owners of the horses.

Fishing Rule Changes Would Benefit Anglers

By NELSON BRYANT

New and simplified regulations for fresh and salt-water fishing are being proposed by the New York State Department of Environmental Conservation, a concept, if wisely carried out, that will gladden the hearts of anglers.
The department emphasizes that the changes are only in the proposal stage, that none will be implemented until a series of public meetings has been held throughout the state to assess the sentiment of the fishing public.
The proposals include increased size limits and reduced catch limits for smallmouth and largemouth bass, northern pike, chain pickerel and muskungee. The reason given for this suggestion is that overharvesting of these predatory species has often led to an overpopulation of the rough fish they feed on, as well as too many stunted panfish, also part of their diet. In some instances the new length limits will protect a species through its first spawning, a sound management procedure.
With reference to the black bass (which includes both the smallmouth and the largemouth), the present statewide regulations set a 10-inch length limit and a daily catch of six. The new proposal, and not including certain options for special seasons and locations, would make the length limit 12 inches and the catch five.
The present statewide regulations for brook trout call for an April 1-to-Sept. 30 season, no length limit and a daily catch of 10. The proposed new regulations for the same fish are quite similar. One suggested change is to shift the opening of the trout season to the first Saturday in April to give working anglers a fair shot at opening day.
Those who take time to study the new proposals will find that there is a limit to the simplistic approach. New York State's varied terrain, from the remote, rugged Adirondacks to low, sandy coastal Long Island, has such varied habitat for certain species—as well as a highly variable fishing pressure—that it is impossible, from the point of view of sound management, to have a single-season, creel and length limit for a given species in all regions.
Also proposed is a statewide length limit of nine inches for brown and rainbow trout and splake, the latter a brook trout-lake trout hybrid, and a creel limit of five rather than 10. At present the basic regulations establish no size limit.
It is necessary at this point to caution that the foregoing applies to existing or proposed statewide regulations. Within the overall framework, in both the existing and the proposed regulations, there are many exceptions.
One might note, for example, that a proposed management option for special waters for browns, rainbow and splake calls for no size limit and an extended season on streams considered marginal for trout—streams that offer poor growth potential and in which there is very little winter carryover of trout that were stocked in the spring. Another option would extend the length limit to 12 inches in waters with good potential for producing larger trout, but which are currently being fished too hard.
In many states, including New York hunting and fishing regulations are fixed by various acts of the Legislature and by order of the state's Fish and Game Department. There is little doubt that the legislative approach is unwieldy and subject to special-interest pressures. But state senators and representatives have been reluctant to lose this power. And in some states many legislators regard fish and game biologists as theoretical dreamers.
Next year, legislation will be sought to give the State Department of Environmental Conservation full authority to formulate, abolish or modify regulations for the state's marine and freshwater fisheries for a period of three years.

Havlicek Reaches Accord With Celtics, Reports to

John Havlicek, star forward of the Boston Celtics and fourth-highest scorer in the history of the National Basketball Association, agreed yesterday to a one-year contract with the club and reported to its training camp at the Massachusetts Maritime Academy. The 36-year-old Havlicek, veteran of 14 seasons with Boston, had stayed away from the training camp while negotiating the contract and had reportedly wanted a two-year agreement to succeed his $250,000-a-year pact. The terms of the new contract, other than its duration, were not announced. Still missing from the camp while also negotiating a contract is Paul Silas, a forward noted for his rebounding. He is scheduled to discuss his contract tomorrow with Irv Levin, the Celtics' owner.

Lieut. Col. Len S. Marella, a 1957 graduate of the United States Military Academy, has been appointed Army's director of intercollegiate athletics. Marella, 42, succeeds Col. William J. Schuder, who retired July 31.

In his undergraduate days, Marella was an undefeated intercollegiate boxer and played baseball four years, one year as captain. He was also vice chairman of the cadet honor committee.

Bill Campbell of the Minnesota Twins and Hawley Eastwick of the Cincinnati Reds have been named baseball's "firmest of the year" winners by The Sporting News. With one point for a victory or a save, each completed the season Sunday with 37 points in competition limited to relief pitchers. Campbell won 17 games and saved 20, while Eastwick won 11 and saved 26.

Bernie Parent, the Philadelphia Flyer goaltender, trying to come back after having missed most of last year with a neck injury, is hurt again. This time he has broken his toe, and the injury will keep him out of action four to six weeks. Parent, winner of two successive Vezina Trophies as the top goalie in the National Hockey League, broke the second toe of his left foot in Sunday's exhibition game against Buffalo.

Rick Forzano, whose job as head coach of the Detroit Lions had been on a must-win basis for the last few weeks, resigned. His withdrawal came a day after the National Football League club had lost its third game in four this season, this one by 24-14 to the Green Bay Packers. There also were reports that Forzano was being recruited to manage the Los Angeles Rams, but he was named as manager of the Packers.

The price difference between our Peugeot Diesel and a comparably equipped Mercedes 240 D is, perhaps, the most obvious difference between them. Both cars are similar in size and roominess. Both can be had with many of the same comforts (although, with Mercedes, you'll have to pay some $1,100 over the base price to have them). Both cars give you power-assisted four-wheel disc brakes for fast, sure stops. Both give you four-wheel independent suspension and steel-belted radials for a smooth, stable ride. Both Mercedes and Peugeot give you the benefit of decades of experience with diesel engines. Since its first production diesel in 1928, Peugeot has built more than a million light diesel engines. Both the Peugeot Diesel and the Mercedes Diesel give you all the operating economies of an engine that has no carburetors to be adjusted and no spark plugs, points, or condensers to be replaced. And of a fuel that averages nationally 6%-7% less per gallon than unleaded gasoline.

The significant difference is, Peugeot gives you all this for some $3,000 less (counting Mercedes' $1,100-plus extra charges for essentially the same kind of equipment that's included in Peugeot's list price).

So if you're considering a Diesel, be it a sedan or wagon, consider the Peugeot first. Because a diesel car is even more economical when you can get it for thousands of dollars less.

For 1977, there's more to an AMC.

More unique design features.

Massive B-pillar construction is unique and basic to Pacer's design, allowing for an unusually large, comfortable passenger compartment. And its wide-design cargo area maximizes width instead of length for easier loading and unloading. For quick, easy access, the Pacer Wagon's passenger door is nearly 4" wider than the driver's. And the rear hatch opens on a flat load floor. Pacer Wagon also has rack & pinion steering for precise handling; isolated suspension, which combined with wide stance, provides a smooth, stable ride; and much, much more.

New AMC Pacer Wagon

New AMC Hornet Wagon

More useable accessible space.

The stylish, hard-working Hornet Wagon is a great car for people and families on the go. Its roomy interior seats five in sedan-like comfort. For cargo-carrying, the rear seat flips down to give you 56 cubic feet of easy-to-load space. And, for easy access, it has 4 doors plus a rear liftgate. Hornet Wagon is both stylish and practical. Its sloping rear deck adds a sporty flare to its clean, handsome lines.

New AMC Matador Wagon

More standard equipment.

The Matador Wagon has the largest cargo area of any intermediate wagon. And at 95 cubic feet of cargo area the Matador Wagon is larger than many 1977 full size Wagons. And, for 1977, it has more standard features than ever before, including power steering, power brakes, 304 CID V-8 engine, automatic transmission, electronic ignition, dual swing tailgate, and many more!

More Protection. Full 2 year 24,000 mile warranty on engine and drive train.

Every AMC car is protected by BUYER PROTECTION PLAN® II, the only full warranty covering engine and drive train for 2 years or 24,000 miles. BPP II also includes a full 1 year/12,000 mile warranty protecting everything else except tires. You also get trip interruption protection. And if guaranteed repairs take overnight, we'll provide a free loaner car. This broad, across-the-board coverage is just one more reason why we say there's more to an AMC.

More value for the money.

Gremlin has a fresh new look for 1977—Handsome new front end treatment. Distinctive new taillights. And a larger rear lift window for easier than ever loading, plus better visibility. And it's loaded with standard features that make it an outstanding value. Like a proven 232 cubic inch OHV 6-cylinder engine; 3-speed floor-mounted synchro-mesh transmission; front disc brakes; and many more. Gremlin also gives you a smooth ride and has more hip and shoulder room than the competition.

Thomas E. Mullaney Bankers Seeking Answers at I.M.F.

MANILA, Oct. 4—Even though there are no widespread expectations of noteworthy decisions from the annual joint meeting of the International Monetary Fund and the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development here this week, the conclave has, as usual, drawn a blue ribbon audience from both the public and the private sectors of the financial world.

but as the specially-invited guests of the I.M.F. and the World Bank. Mr. Page of Morgan Guaranty said he considered it very important that the I.M.F. or the group of 10 nations develop some method for making the changes of currency values in various countries less of a crisis, and that any surveillance of currency actions should be handled discreetly and in an international institutional manner.

facturers Hanover Trust Company, in a recent article in Euramoney magazine in which he said: "It may be that the international banking community will need to give thought to new forms or procedures for close collaboration with the official monetary institutions."

David Rockefeller, chairman of the Chase Manhattan Bank, is here. So is A. W. Clausen, the Bank of America's chief executive; Donald C. Platten, chairman of the Chemical Bank; G. A. Costanzo, vice chairman of Citicorp; Walter H. Page, president of the Morgan Guaranty Trust Company; Frank A. Petto, chairman of Morgan Stanley, and about 85 other prominent American banking and securities industry officials.

Several bankers said they felt the I.M.F. was better able than the private banks to impose the pressure for necessary adjustments in the developing countries.

On that point, one American banker here cited another article in the current issue of Euramoney by Lord Barber, chairman of the Standard Chartered Banking Group of London, who wrote: "The I.M.F. World Bank meetings provide the occasion for a whole series of informal conversations where, if decisions are not actually taken on the crucial issues of the time, new initiatives certainly are."

SIMON SAYS NATIONS CONSUMING OIL FACE $50 BILLION DEFICIT

BORROWING DIFFICULTIES SEEN

Addressing the I.M.F. in Manila, He Lays Rising Debt to Surpluses of the Petroleum Exporters

By EDWIN L. DALE JR.
Special to The New York Times
MANILA, Tuesday, Oct. 5—Secretary of the Treasury William E. Simon told the finance ministers of more than 100 oil-importing nations today that they faced a massive balance of payments deficit of about $50 billion next year as a counterpart of a renewed increase in the surplus of the oil-producing countries.

Combination Adjustment Is Urged

He urged instead "combination of adjustment by individual countries, some slowing in the rate of private lending [to countries] and moderate provision of official financing on a multilateral and conditional basis."

$35 Billion Deficit Estimated

Mr. Simon's estimates indicated that the bulk of next year's payments deficit vis-a-vis the industrialized countries, he said, would be on the order of $35 billion, with the rest incurred by the non-oil, less developed countries.

Banks Fix Growth Pattern

This growth path is fixed by the bank's capital. After tough negotiations last spring, Mr. Simon succeeded in obtaining only a small capital increase, the practical effect of which is to set a ceiling of $5.8 billion a year for the bank's lending for the years ahead.

Market Place Gray, Petrolane and Possible Other Suitors

By ROBERT MEITZ

While the Gray Tool Company has announced that 50 percent of its stock is in friendly hands—enough to block control by Petrolane Inc.—Gray's ardent suitor—Gray, a Houston-based oil service company, is nonetheless looking around for a marriage partner more to its liking.

Gray, whose shares are traded over the counter, has been bathed in an unwelcome spotlight ever since Petrolane made its initial overtures last week. In the aftermath of last Friday's sweetener from Petrolane raising the ante to $30 a share, Gray's stock reached 30 bid, 30 1/4 asked yesterday.

It has become a far more complex story than even Petrolane had expected. The Long Beach, Calif., distributor of liquefied petroleum gas, supermarket operator and supplier of oil-exploration and production services announced yesterday that Jerry Fields, a director, was leaving the board following disclosures that he had purchased 24,400 shares of Gray on the open market based on nonpublic information.

Meanwhile, the Securities and Exchange Commission is investigating the possibility of additional insider trading in Gray stock by others besides Mr. Fields.

A special committee of the Petrolane board has been appointed to investigate the circumstances surrounding the trading of stock in Gray Tool that was discovered and announced by Petrolane on Tuesday. Until that investigation is completed, Petrolane said, no action would be taken with regard to the position of Mr. Fields as president of its Mark C. Bloome subsidiary, one of the nation's largest independent tire dealers, a 1972 Petrolane acquisition.

Yesterday, Wall Street was buzzing with reports that Gray would receive bids from one or more other suitors momentarily and that the company would probably act on the most favorable one today or later this week. In this energy-short era, the oil-equipment companies have become the hottest acquisition prospects in sight and Houston is bumping with merger talk.

Among the companies that are reportedly talking with Gray are NL Industries; W. R. Grace, which has made a number of acquisitions in the energy field in recent years, and the Masco Corporation, the producer of Delta single-handle mixing faucets and cold-extruded industrial components.

Hughes Tool reportedly would like to take a look at Gray but has enough antitrust problems already, observers say.

In a Monday advertisement, Gray noted that it had grown from "third or fourth position in 1970" to become the "No. 2 worldwide supplier of well-head equipment." That would be No. 2 after Hughes, a company that is widely diversified in oilfield equipment.

TRW, another diversified company, could also take an interest in Gray, observers in Houston said. One of the more interesting aspects of the case is Gray's reported control of 50 percent of its stock. In its ad, the company said profit-sharing and pension plans, officers and directors, members of their families, related trusts, Gray employees, former employees, retirees and their families own or "represent" more than 50 percent of outstanding shares.

That seemed a fairly comprehensive list of "friends" to one observer who felt that Petrolane probably believes some of them can be bought at the right price.

On the other hand, assuming that the 30 percent remained steadfastly in Gray's camp, why then would Gray be talking with other companies? A Houston source said that Gray went public a couple of years ago for image reasons and that top officials had regretted the move ever since. There are those troublesome reports that must go to the S.E.C., and endless conversations with analysts, particularly when the stock moves a point either way. Since it would not be feasible for Gray to buy all its own shares—there are 1.7 million common shares outstanding—the company might like to become a division of another, larger listed company. The advantage: Officers of Gray would get their money back, possibly in cash, and could devote their efforts to that which they do best—running the company. The analysts would then have to speak with the parent company.

Meanwhile, Gray is urging all shareholders to sit tight, warning that the price is too low and that results for the entire 1976 fiscal year will show a marked improvement over fiscal 1975. Gray earned $2.94 a share in fiscal 1975, which the company compared in its ad with 25 cents a share in fiscal 1971.

Not one member of the board and none of Gray's officers will tender, the Gray ad stated. The company added that an alternative bid could be more favorable and "possibly on a tax-free basis."

a proposed $2 billion acquisition of Utah International by the General Electric Company. The merger would be the largest ever in the nation's history, General Electric yesterday dropped 1 1/4 points to 52.

After the market close, General Electric announced that its third-quarter earnings were $184.8 million, up 18 percent from $156.1 in the 1975 period.

The domestic oil issues, which have been one of the better performing groups in recent weeks, made small gains yesterday. The group, according to a compilation by Standard & Poor's, rose 5.6 percent from Sept. 8 to Sept. 29.

Yesterday, in the oil group, Getty rose 1/2 to 189; Union Oil 1/2 to 55 1/2; Phillips 1/2 to 21 1/2; the Sun Company 1/2 to 44 1/2; and Mont-Richfield 1/2 to 56 1/2.

William M. Le Fevre, senior analyst of Granger & Company, commented that the domestic oil group's main strength recently was anticipation by investors of higher interstate natural gas rates.

He said this expectation was confirmed yesterday when the United States Supreme Court declined to hear challenges to natural gas rate increases brought by the Public Service Commission of New York and a group of Eastern utilities.

Ten of the 15 most actively traded issues declined yesterday, three advanced and two were unchanged. The most heavily traded stock was Norton Simon Inc., a food and service concern, which dropped 1 1/2 to 20 1/2 following a letter sale of 33,700 shares at 20. Merrill Lynch handled the sale and most of the buy portion of the block.

Turnover on the Big Board tumbled to 12.03 million shares from 20.62 million shares on Friday. Analysts attributed the lower volume to the observance of the Jewish holiday Yom Kippur. Yesterday's volume was the smallest since Aug. 30 when 11.14 million shares changed hands.

Consolidated trading of issues listed on the exchange dropped to 15.12 million shares from 24.35 million shares on Friday.

Hoerner Waldorf, a manufacturer of paperboard and packaging products, lost 1 1/2 to 19 1/2. The company announced that although it had held talks on a possible merger it had no plan at this time to merge.

However, merger news sent California Financial up 1/2 to 8 1/2. United Financial said it had increased its offer to acquire all the shares of California Financial to $10 a share from $8.50. United Financial rose 1/2 to 11 1/2.

The Great Atlantic and Pacific Tea Company gained 3/4 to 11 3/4. The supermarket chain announced that its second quarter profits climbed to 43 cents a share from 16 cents the year before. Results for the latest quarter include an 18 cents-a-share tax loss carryforward credit.

Accounting Unit Chief Concerned Over Reception of 'Memorandum'

Marshall S. Armstrong, chairman of the Financial Accounting Standards Board, expressed concern yesterday that "the cries of alarmists will prevent others from fairly and objectively evaluating the issues" involved in the board's long-awaited "discussion memorandum" on the objectives of financial accounting. In a speech at the Detroit Economic Club, Mr. Armstrong said the board, the private sector's top rule-making body in accounting, intended to publish the document, a several-hundred-page tome, next month.

Mindful of the uproar touched off in banking circles by an earlier memo on accounting for restructured debt—a much narrower problem—Mr. Armstrong noted that "many fear change per se any change."

According to him, a great many critics of the earlier memo erroneously pegged it as a foray into "current-value accounting," which would bring accounting closer to current market values. The board received nearly 900 letters of aroused opposition and listened to four days of public hearings, 90 percent of which were "unrespected protests" against an irrelevant issue, Mr. Armstrong contended.

as a director and chairman of the board's finance committee, added that he was "pleased that we can continue our long standing policy of planning the orderly transition of management."

In another senior level change, David R. Clark, 51 years old, vice chairman of the executive committee, will succeed Mr. Burke as president and chairman of the executive committee.

Mr. Sellars, chairman and chief executive officer since 1973, joined Johnson & Johnson as a salesman in 1939.

Mr. Burke, previously in the marketing department of the Procter & Gamble Company, joined Johnson & Johnson's merchandising department in 1953. He is a native of Rutland, Vermont and a graduate of Holy Cross College, class of 1947, and the Harvard Business School, class of 1949.

Job changes: Salvatore Giordano Jr., executive vice president of the Fedders Corporation since 1967, succeeds his father, Salvatore Giordano Sr., 66 years old, as president, the company announced. The elder Mr. Giordano continues as chairman and chief executive officer.

The court said it would also review an Ohio case where a lower court ruled that the state must pay benefits to workers affected by another union's strike, a case in which the United States Steel Corporation and the Republic Steel Corporation laid off steel workers in 1974 after a strike by coal miners employed by the two companies.

The Court refused to review a decision by a Federal appeals court permitting the Attorney General of Florida to bring antitrust charges against 17 petroleum companies.

Florida Oil Case Barred
It would not bear an appeal to a lower court ruling, involving the Apex Oil Company, that a company could be held accountable for failing to report an oil spill, even when officials had no knowledge of the infraction.

The Court also asked the National Labor Relations Board to reconsider a finding that it was unlawful for steelworkers on strike to picket gasoline stations selling products of the Dow Chemical Company.

An appeal by the Boise Cascade Corporation and the General Foods Corporation, on the tax treatment of interest-bearing notes bought at a discount, was also refused a hearing.

A Court of Claims decision granting about $37 million in breach-of-contract damages to the Northern Helix Company on a Federal helium contract was left untouched.

The court agreed, however, to hear a lower court decision preventing the Vendo Company from collecting a $7.5 million judgment against Harry Stone, a former officer, in a case involving charges of violation of fiduciary duty in the development of a vending machine.

The Court also refused to hear a lower court ruling enabling Ampex Corporation's stockholders who had purchased shares from about mid-1970 to about mid-1972 to file a class-action suit against the company, several officers and former officers and Touche Ross & Company, former auditors, in the wake of heavy financial losses reported by Ampex in 1972.

It also declined to hear a Federal court case in New York in which a jury last year convicted Carl Anderson, former chairman of Orvis Brothers, a brokerage firm, of conspiracy to file false financial data before the firm's collapse six years ago.

James E. Burke, 51 years old, president and chairman of the executive committee of Johnson & Johnson will succeed Richard B. Sellars, 61 years old, as chairman of the board and chief executive officer of the pharmaceutical company effective Nov. 1, the company announced yesterday. The change in command continues what Mr. Sellars called "our tradition at Johnson & Johnson of building management from within." Mr. Sellars, who will continue

STEEL OUTPUT IN WEEK OFF TO 2.33 MILLION TONS

Domestic steel production for the week ended Oct. 2 fell 2.1 percent lower than in the preceding week, dropping total output to 2.33 million tons, its lowest level since the week ended Feb. 7 when only 2.29 million tons were poured.

The American Iron and Steel Institute, that released the weekly statistics yesterday, pointed out that at the Oct. 2 rate of production the industry was utilizing only 76 percent of its total production capability. This puts it on a level comparable to production in the final three weeks of January and contrasts with the low 90 percent levels of mid-May.

By contrast, production for the week ended Sept. 25 amounted to 2.38 million tons and production utilization amounted to 78.4 percent.

Cumulative production through Oct. 2 reached 99.54 million tons, a gain of 9.2 percent over the 91.17 million tons poured in the corresponding 1975 period.

The latest total meant that the industry was using 63.8 percent of its total production capability through Oct. 2 in contrast with 79.4 percent a year ago.

Industry observers indicated yesterday that steel industry quarterly reports, due to be released around Oct. 14, would provide "quite a bit of disappointment for stockholders."

Peso Devaluation's Impact on Earnings

Workers in Pueblo, Mexico. Many foreign companies in Mexico held large amounts of pesos in recent crisis.

By H. J. MAIDENBERG

Shareholders in companies with Mexican subsidiaries should be bracing for some sad news when third-quarter earnings are published in a few weeks because of the 40 percent devaluation of the peso last Aug. 31.

In many cases, the writedowns against earnings will be far larger, proportionally, than the particular company's stake in Mexico would lead one to assume.

One reason is that many foreign concerns operating in Mexico, including most of the big multinational corporations, were caught with uncommonly large holdings of pesos when the currency was allowed to float on the world's money markets.

Another reason, which many accountants also explained recently, was the inability of United States companies to smooth out their losses over several reporting quarters because of a relatively new accounting rule.

"Why were we caught with so many pesos?" the chief financial officer of a large international company asked rhetorically the other day. "Because we were completely suckered, that's why."

"On one hand, the Mexican Government created a severe credit squeeze in the two months leading up to the devaluation. You couldn't borrow a peso from a bank here.

"Our New York bankers, meanwhile, steadfastly dismissed the year-long talk about a peso devaluation and said they would be happy to advance us as many dollars as we needed.

"So we borrowed dollars for operating purposes and, naturally, converted them into the then-scarce pesos at rates that now seem criminal. That's how we were caught with so many pesos."

To international accounting specialists at Peat, Marwick, Mitchell & Company, the experience of the multinational cocero could have been largely avoided by following two fundamental rules.

"Any company operating abroad should try to hedge as much of its local currency as it can, particularly in these days of floating rates," one Peat, Marwick accountant noted. "This can be done by selling currencies forward in New York, Chicago or in several European money markets.

"In the case of the peso, the forward rates were below the official 8-cent rate before the floating, but certainly above today's level of 4.5 cents."

The other rule emphasized by Peat, Marwick and other leading international accounting organizations is that concerns operating abroad should try to borrow as much as they can locally to get as close to a zero net dollar investment in the country as possible.

This common practice by multinational concerns reduces their needs to repay dollar debt with cheapening local money. It also helps prevent profits from being eroded by devaluation because, in the case of the peso, for example, debts in that currency were reduced sharply by the devaluation.

As for the new accounting rule that affected many companies in Mexico (and other lands with weak currencies), it is financial accounting standard No. 8, which accountants often term "option 8."

It was imposed by the Financial Accounting Standards Board, the private sector's rule-making body, at the start of 1976.

Basically, it requires that a company's cash and accounts receivable be translated at the current rate of exchange. It also requires that plant and inventory costs be converted at rates prevailing at the time the factory was built and the stocks acquired.

"The idea behind option 8 was born in the days of fixed currency rates," an accountant at Drexel Burnham Inc., the large brokerage house, observed the other day. "Today, in a world of floating rates, it has raised more problems than it was created to solve. We never liked the rule."

For one thing, he said, F.A.S. opinion No. 8 prevents corporate victims of devaluations from deferring losses over several reporting periods and thus distorts earnings statements such as the third-quarter reports that will be issued in a few weeks.

"Securities analysts know all about this distortion," the Drexel Burnham official pointed out, "but I'm afraid many ordinary stockholders will be rudely surprised."

A member of the Financial Accounting Standards Board countered by observing that F.A.S. opinion No. 8 often benefits companies by concentrating unusual gains in one reporting period as well.

"I don't want to get involved in this controversial rule," he said, "but it should be noted that many corporations here and abroad would love to translate inventory costs at current rates and forget about what they paid for the goods way back when," thereby escaping some taxes on the inventory profits.

Stock Options Tax Rule

A new tax rule that could benefit traders in stock options, the hottest sector of the equities market, is incorporated in the Tax Reform bill signed by President Ford yesterday.

In essence, the new tax rule would treat gains from both long and short positions in stock options as capital items, which are taxed at lower rates than ordinary income.

Previously, profits from long positions were taxed as capital items, while those from short sales were treated as ordinary income and thus taxed at higher income tax rates.

"Imagine a situation," Vincent J. Palermo, manager of options trading at Carl Marks & Company, said the other day, "in which gains from long positions in common stocks were treated as capital items and those from short sales were taxed as ordinary income. People would be inhibited from trading."

But this, apparently, has been the case since the Chicago Board Options Exchange began trading stock options in April 1973. These options are the right or warrant to buy 100 shares of a stock at a fixed price during a specified period.

"Puts," or short sales are still not permitted by the Securities and Exchange Commission in the options market. However, the seller of a "naked" call option—which is not backed by actual shares—is considered in essence a short seller and any gains in trading were treated as ordinary income.

In market terminology, a long is one who buys something in the hope its value will rise, while a short is one who sells what he may or may not actually own in the hope the price will fall and thus enable him to deliver the goods at a lower cost.

"Options traders always had this handicap," Mr. Palermo said, "and the new tax law should increase options trading significantly. If nothing else, the Tax Reform Bill would eliminate confusion regarding the tax treatment of options. All gains would be treated as a capital item."

Saudi Arabian Plans for Aramco Takeover Expected to Be Made in Europe Monday

Report, a news letter, contends, however, that Sheikh Ahmed Zaki Yamani, the Saudi Oil Minister, was aware of the proposed American tax legislation when he was reported to have said at a September meeting that the agreement might be signed at the next meeting.

Negotiations for the 100 percent takeover have been going on since December 1974. The sites of the meetings have been kept secret by the parties involved since the terrorist attack on the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries ministers' meeting in Vienna in December 1975.

There are indications, however, that the meeting will be held in Geneva. A spokesman for Aramco commented, "The only thing I can guarantee you is that it is not being held in Panama City."

Panama City, Fla., was the site of a meeting last March, when attempts at secrecy attracted publicity as armed guards surrounded the resort at which the talks were held.

The 100 percent takeover by the Saudis is not expected to make much change to either the relationship between the companies and the Arab oilmen or between Aramco and consumers.

Contrary to the direction taken by Kuwait, Iran and Venezuela, after 100 percent nationalization, the Saudis are reported to be letting the Aramco company partners continue to handle the marketing of the bulk of the Saudi crude oil.

Iran and Kuwait have limited company purchases and tried to market a growing portion of the crude through their own national oil companies.

According to the supposed terms, the Saudis have decided to rely on the four oil companies to handle all but a small portion of their output of eight-million-plus barrels a day. The Aramco partners will buy their oil at the full market price set by the Saudi Government, provided the price is no higher than a Saudi sale to a third party.

Aramco will be paid a service fee to continue to run the entire oil operation on behalf of the Saudi Government. This fee is reported to be about 21 cents a barrel, which includes a basic operation fee of about 15 cents a barrel and an exploration fee of about 6 cents a barrel.

In theory the 21-cent service fee will be slightly lower than the 23-cent to 25-cent profit margin at which the companies are now operating. However, the companies will be relieved of the burden of financing their share of Aramco's huge capital outlays.

Eighty three years ago this very day Banco Popular de Puerto Rico opened its doors to the business community. Since then we have endeavored to offer the most complete and efficient banking services.

Today Banco Popular is the only commercial bank offering full service banking in Puerto Rico, New York City and Los Angeles. With total resources in excess of one billion dollars, Banco Popular ranks 91st among the more than 14,000 commercial banks in the United States and 384th among commercial banks in the Free World.

Our international presence, complemented by our network of more than 800 correspondent banks, received special recognition from the United States Department of Commerce through the President's "E Star" Award, the most significant citation conferred to organizations that excel in the promotion of exports and have previously received the "E" Award. Only nine commercial banks in the United States, aside from Banco Popular, have received this Presidential Award.

This distinction affirms Banco Popular's foresight in recognizing the importance of international trade and our initiative in organizing Puerto Rico's first and complete International Division.

Today, as in 1893, Banco Popular endeavors to offer the most complete and efficient banking services to our local, national and international friends and customers.

Wheat and Corn Prices Up

By ELIZABETH M. FOWLER

Wheat and corn prices also showed strength, December wheat closed at $2.89 a bushel, up almost 5 cents a bushel, while December corn closed at $2.69 1/2, up 5 cents a bushel.

Silver futures, which had taken a cue recently from falling gold prices, opened sharply lower and then sprang upward to close unchanged on the Commodity Exchange. Silver for December delivery, which ended at $4.37 an ounce on Friday, opened at $4.33 and then moved up to close at $4.37 an ounce, unchanged. Sometimes silver takes its impetus from higher soybean prices and yesterday might have been such a session. In addition, the news last week that the Government intended to increase its stockpiling of various important metals and other commodities probably bolstered the market. Copper prices also showed a little strength yesterday, but gold moved down in slow trading.

A REPORT BY TREASURY SEES GOLD PRICE RISE
 WASHINGTON, Oct. 4 (UPI)—The price of gold—stripped of inflation—will probably rise over the next decade if the Government does not increase the volume of its gold sales, according to a Treasury Department report.
 The report, released today, was made for the department by its former gold market analyst, Thomas Wolfe.
 The 64-page study concludes that "a significantly larger volume of Government gold sales over the next decade would probably reduce the real price of gold."
 Mr. Wolfe said industrial demand for gold recovered so strongly in 1975 and 1976—after faltering in 1973 and 1974—that industry now buys almost 85 percent of the gold marketed, or 30 million ounces, each year.

 "With the economic recovery accelerating in most of the world, it seems probable that industrial gold demand over the next five years will substantially exceed current gold production," he said.
G.M. Plans '77 Output for 2 Vans
 PONTIAC, Mich., Oct. 4 (AP)—The General Motors Corporation's Truck & Coach division said today that it would begin production of two General Motors van models at the G.M.C. facilities here starting next year. Robert W. Truxell, a G.M. vice president and general manager of the G.M.C. division, said about 1,800 new jobs could be added to the division's current employment of 12,600 workers in Pontiac.

Advertising

Was Simmons Wrong on Esquire?

By PHILLIP H. DOUGHERTY

Have any of the advertisers who dropped Esquire from their schedules as a result of the last Simmons study looked at some of the direct marketing advertisers in the magazine and asked themselves, "Do they know something that I don't know?"

It's a valid question since direct marketers or advertisers that coupon their ads are far more aware of a medium's effectiveness than the general advertiser.

"We pay little attention to what anybody else says. Our results determine where we spend our money," said Marion Workman, public relations director of Cosvetic Labs in Atlanta.

"We look at Simmons and T.G.I., but then we make a simplistic decision. If we don't get coupons we feel we're not getting readership," said Walter J. Walsh, director of public relations of the Bankers Life Company.

The two companies he referred to, W. R. Simmons Research and Target Group Index, are both in the business of estimating total magazine audiences on the basis of national surveys. The last Simmons study, conducted under new management, showed that Esquire's total audience had dropped from 7 million to 4.1 million.

This has had drastic results, since many advertisers and their agencies compute a medium's efficiency—cost of reaching readers—on the basis of these syndicated studies.

But was the magazine less effective after those statistics were published than before?

General advertisers, such as liquor, cigarette or automobile companies, really have no way of knowing. They can pretest advertising copy and after an ad is published they can test to see how many readers "noted" it, but as far as measuring buying influence is concerned, they are at a loss. Direct marketers, however, know. So do service companies such as insurance concerns whose coupons offer brochures or policy cost estimates.

"Esquire's done very well for us," said Donald F. Sorensen, vice president-advertising and sales promotion, of the Occidental Life Insurance Company of California.

The Enterprising Publishing Company of Wilmington, Del.—which puts out such interesting tomes as "How to Form Your Own Corporation" and "How to Do Business Tax Free"—has run three ads in Esquire in the last three years. According to Margaret Buchanan, its ad director, the 1973 ad is still receiving about two responses a month.

Judged on a cost per return basis, Esquire has outperformed Playboy by a bit, she said.

"In terms of cost per inquiry," said Mr. Walsh of Bankers Life, "Esquire strikes a median—it's not the highest nor is it the lowest. They seem to appeal to a broad decision-making audience."

Cosvetic, which sells Head Start, vitamins for the hair, uses 50 magazines as well as television in 40 markets. Asked to rate Esquire, its Miss Workman said that if there were five slots starting with excellent, then good, she'd put Esquire in the good class.

Of course, the product advertised has a lot to do with the response. For some reason Esquire, at least in its October issue, is missing most book club and record album advertising, two important categories. A number of them are expected in next year, after the magazine lowers its ad rates for them by 15 percent.

Esquire carried 1,000 advertising pages in 1974 and 791 last year. It is expecting a 20 percent drop this year to 632 pages. However, the second half is showing stronger than the first and December's issue will carry 106 pages of ads compared with last year's 94.

It is one of the few magazines showing a decline this year called the best in magazine history. Not all of its problems can be attributed to a poor Sim-

Economist Plans American Edition

The Economist, the British weekly that has aggressively been seeking new subscribers in the United States is now preparing to offer them to United States advertisers.

The business and news magazine that increased its American circulation 73 percent to 25,000 in the last three years will on Jan. 8 begin publishing a United States advertising edition.

In order to get across to the advertising community some of its important attributes—not the least of which is an annual reader income of $53,000—it will run an ad in The New York Times and Advertising Age in mid-October to announce a contest.

The first prize will be two round-trip tickets aboard a Concorde, a week at London's Ritz hotel and half-ownership for a day of a race horse. The ad is not specific about which half.

mons study. The softening of the men's wear market also has had its effects.

The magazine recently changed its editorial format partially to make it faster reading and increase its pass-along readership and thus raise its audience size. A partial reading on the results of the change will be available in the Simmons 1976-77 study on Nov. 1.

Computers Study Gifts

The computer has been enlisted to answer one of corporate America's most burning questions—how do you deliver a Christmas bottle to a business acquaintance with as little embarrassment and fuss as possible?

Behind this breakthrough is the Nationwide Gift Liquor Service, Clifton, N. J., which has lined up liquor retailers in every ZIP code area where liquor can be sold. Once N.G.L.S. gets an order from a giver it transmits to the recipient a cashier's check drawn on the Midland National Bank and made out to the retailer. The service charge is usually $2.50 a gift.

Ads promoting the service, which intend ultimately to be available to general consumers, are now appearing in certain trade publications. Smith/ Greenland is the agency and it has also prepared a catalogue that explains the service and includes ads for the 17 premium brands that are involved. The charge to distillers is $7,500 for each brand.

Irving Lipman, president of the company, says, "It is perfectly legal to give gifts of liquor for any personal or business reason—to show appreciation to an employee for a job well done as a thank-you to a supplier for a courtesy extended, or to a customer, just for being a customer."

Is that what some folks used to call payola?

New Doubleday Division

The Doubleday Advertising Company, which began as a house agency for Doubleday & Company—the publisher, and now handles a variety of accounts, has established a new division called Book Mart that will help publishers and sellers move their wares.

Some five specialist agencies today handle advertising the majority of book publishers. Book Mart's reason for being, it says, is to bring to the field the insights of a consumer goods agency and perhaps answer the question, "Why should all book advertising look the same?"

Advertisers are finding it increasingly difficult to buy spot TV time. Even more difficult is finding the money to pay for it.

In Houston, spot TV costs doubled this year, and some people predict another 40 to 50% increase in 1977. That's why a lot of advertisers are turning to newspapers like The Houston Chronicle.

Advertisers in The Houston Chronicle can get the reach and frequency they need in Houston at a much lower CPM than spot TV affords.

Swiss Franc Against Dollar; Currencies Rise

Oct. 4 (AP) —The dollar first European currencies against the mark and the two strongest continental currencies eased against others.

German mark weakened in major currencies, including the Japanese yen, following German elections.

Gold recovered a bit as the pound recovered some of its losses from a disastrous decline last week.

The dollar, closed in Europe, 4.9490 French francs, 355.00 at Friday's close, 30 West German marks, 32 Zurich, 2.4610 Swiss, 2.4490 Amsterdam, 1.65 down from 2.5655, Italian lire, down from 1.935.

Reserves increase as the dollar rose $129 billion to $5.158 billion, the day, but much of the increase came from foreign borrowing.

Treasury said, a further $1 billion borrowed from other public institutions, a further $1 billion borrowed from Iran, $44 million from the Electricity Council, $34 million from the Post Office.

The opening address of the meeting, Mohammed Ali, criticized the United States for its role in holding back negotiations last year.

Essential Oil Exports Studied in Indonesia

JAKARTA, Indonesia, Oct. 4—Indonesia has begun an investigation to determine whether a local export company may have defrauded American and European importers of more than $1 million on sales of essential oils.

The investigation, which is being conducted by the Ministry of Trade, followed a deluge of complaints from importers in the United States, Britain, France and the Netherlands who recently discovered large shipments of what they believed to be cananga, vertivert, patchouli, citronella and clove leaf oils from an Indonesian export company, C.V.P.D. Faraport, contained only water.

Total losses to the foreign importers, including compensation payments to customers for unfilled orders, may run as high as $2 million according to sources here.

Trade Ministry officials said that they hoped to wind up their preliminary investigations shortly. Meanwhile the ministry is pressing Faraport, to arrange for compensation for the foreign importers apparently victimized in the scandal.

"We have urged Faraport to arrange settlement of the claims," said Mohammad Ibrahim, director of exports. "If no settlement is reached the Government will take measures against Faraport."

CHECKLESS SOCIETY FOR SOCIAL SECURITY

Continued From Page 65 cost of processing checks—32 cents apiece, compared with 55 cents for each credit-card transaction and 15 cents for each cash transaction.

In this light, the experience with direct deposit of Social Security checks becomes instructive. A check by correspondents of The New York Times in eight cities found that in line with the letters pouring in here, although there are widespread fears about the lack of information provided to the depositor, otherwise the system appears to be working relatively well.

None of the massive computer confusion that pessimists predicted appears to have come about. Indeed, most of the problems are as old as Social Security itself—bureaucratic inefficiency, unreliable mail service and the like.

"I live on a very stringent budget and I am in trouble with my bills if I do not receive my check promptly on the third of every month," said 74-year-old Bertha Adams, a resident of San Diego. "But now I'm never sure until the day between the sixth and the tenth of the month, when I receive my monthly bank statement, that the money is actually in my account."

"I received the check at the bank for a couple of months and then, when I tried to balance my checkbook, the bank statement showed that I had $17.20 more than my own figures showed I should have," reported Helen McGuire of Seattle. "The next month, I had $34.40 more. What had happened was that my Social Security had been increased $17.20 a month. I finally figured this out by looking to see how much had been deposited."

In an attempt to correct this deficiency, the Social Security Administration recently announced that to improve communications, it would begin to mail informational materials separately to benefit recipients. However, this change means a partial restoration of the massive and costly mailings of paper that the electronic system was designed to make obsolete.

Bankers Seek Answers at I.M.F. Meeting

Continued From Page 65 men do not have any official participatory role in the week-long proceedings of the supranational lending agencies—no speech-making opportunities, no voting rights and no direct voices in policy-making committee meetings, but they may attend the open plenary sessions each day and are permitted to circulate freely among the accredited governmental delegates at the convention hall, at the numerous receptions and other functions that crowd each day's schedule.

There are some 325 representatives from the private banking, investment banking and securities business on every continent here—about one-third the number of government officials and advisers from the 129 member countries of the two monetary and lending agencies.

Why have they come from every part of the globe to a third world city so far from their home offices? In most cases, it is a hard-nosed business decision. As heavy creditors of the developing world, the private bankers have a great stake in the economic decisions ultimately taken by individual nations and by the international financial agencies. Meetings such as this pave the way for the eventual crucial decisions.

Between 1973 and the end of last year, the external liabilities of the non-oil, less-developed countries exploded to some $120 billion, up 50 percent in less than two years. The private banks now hold about $50 billion of that debt, up from $30 billion two years earlier. How sound is that risk now? What are individual countries doing about improving their financial condition? How can the private banks coordinate with the international lending institutions in financing future financial needs of the developing world? Those are the questions that the private businessmen are trying to have answered this week.

Congress Gave U.S. Authorization To Ratify New Rules for I.M.F.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 4—Congress passed legislation in its waning hours last week that authorizes the United States to ratify new International Monetary Fund rules formally sanctioning floating exchange rates and raising the country's backing for the agency by about $2 billion.

The United States is expected to announce during the current I.M.F.-World Bank meeting in Manila that it will vote in favor of the new fund rules, which were worked out by finance ministers and central banks in Jamaica last January. In addition to making the floating exchange rates and greater American commitment formal, such actions are expected to pave the way for the I.M.F. to further dispose of its gold holdings.

Former Leading Conservative Is Backing Lowenstein in His Race for a Seat in House

ORGE VECSEY
The New York Times
—Can Allard K. Lowenstein

use the "left-wing" label over the years, and occasional candidate acceptable to both the Republican and Conservative in southwest Nassau

I believe in redemption. Ernest van den Haag, hard-learned dignitary to Representative Lowenstein in Congress.

ag, an author and educationist, is thereby under the movement of Lyndon B. Johnson, former Democratic Party leader, and former Democratic Party member of the House of Representatives, Edmond G. Brown and a man who proudly on Nixon's enemies is once again challenging the Republican incumbent in the Fifth District. Mr. Wylder beat Mr. Lowenstein nearly 15,000 votes in the primary.

around, Mr. Lowenstein is by none other than the rightist writer, called Mr. Lowenstein's integrity and sense of duty.

the impact of these non-residents in a suburb hardly any trace of national or local life, often diametrically opposite to the one in the city.

Lowenstein, in his one year in the House, has been a 100 percent liberal Democrat

John W. Wylder

Allard K. Lowenstein

Action and Mr. Wylder was recently given a 78 percent conservative rating by the Americans for Constitutional Action.

Mr. Wylder visits the district on weekends, while Mr. Lowenstein appears whenever he can. His campaign, as usual, is beefed up by young people from outside the district, at least 12 from New York City and nine from out of the state, according to Paul Tully, a campaign aide.

These young people, who receive only a meal a day and few other expenses, have sought to increase voter registration, and Mr. Tully asserts that 13,000 of the 19,000 new registrations in the district were either Democratic or independent. He says that Republicans have dropped below 50 percent in the district for the first time in many years.

In 1974 Mr. Lowenstein spent more than double Mr. Wylder's listed campaign expenditures—$112,000 to $50,000. But Mr. Lowenstein charges that Mr. Wylder more than made up for that with his mail-franking privileges and other benefits of an incumbent.

This year, Mr. Wylder has raised $45,000 through donations from a "Congressional Club" of 100 district residents who paid $200 apiece. Carl Holman, an insurance executive, who is Mr. Wylder's finance chairman, said there was virtually no money from outside the district.

Mr. Lowenstein has raised $51,000 so far, from 614 district donors and 431 other donors (including 245 from California), according to Mr. Tully. Governor Brown of California spent 11 hours raising funds on Long Island on Aug. 30.

Mr. Lowenstein obviously hopes that endorsements from other nonresident celebrities will help him further.

"These are just glamour testimonials," Mr. Wylder said earlier this week. "It's like saying O. J. Simpson drives a Plymouth. That has nothing to do with whether Plymouth is a good car or not."

Mr. Wylder, assistant to John Rhodes of Arizona, the minority floor leader of the House, was interviewed in Washington earlier this week.

"These endorsements are all theory," Mr. Wylder said, "and if politics is all theory, what am I doing working hard at meetings all week? This job is not an exchange of ideas. This is where you produce hard results, work things out. This is not Never-Never Land."

Mr. Wylder called the William Buckley endorsement "kind of weird—somebody is fooling somebody," and said "I've got the Buckley I want." [James L. Buckley, Republican Senator, hurriedly endorsed Mr. Wylder after William Buckley's column.]

Regarding the Garment-Hauser endorsements, Mr. Wylder said: "It would be hypocritical to raise Watergate as an issue now that he's got those two for him."

But Mr. Lowenstein is still calling Mr. Wylder "the last man to jump ship" just before Mr. Nixon's resignation, and says Mr. Wylder has constantly supported "the wrong side."

"I've been an honorable Congressman," Mr. Wylder said. "I kept myself out of trouble down here. I voted as a moderate. I represent the voters in my district. I try to get more jobs, more construction for Long Island."

"I never see [Mr. Lowenstein] doing anything in the community. He's a wandering troubador."

This is a familiar charge against Mr. Lowenstein, who has run for Congress in Brooklyn and Nassau, but insists he has lived in the same house in Long Beach for the last 10 years, even while working in California in the last year.

"I'm the same person," Mr. Lowenstein has said, "but some of my views have changed. You can't stick to dogma. You have to face the issues. I sponsored day-care legislation when I was in Congress, but the way it has been administered has not worked."

But isn't Dr. van den Haag concerned that, if elected, Mr. Lowenstein might promote some ultra-liberal legislation that would run counter to Dr. van den Haag's tenets?

"I trust Al," Dr. van den Haag said. "He will examine each problem. For example, we agree we need a certain amount of defense. But do we need this kind of bomber or that kind? I don't know, I would trust Al to find the answers."

Court Rules Virginia Localities Can Sign Pacts With Employees

ARLINGTON, Va., Oct. 4 (AP)—A Circuit Court judge struck down today Virginia's contention that its local governments cannot legally sign collective bargaining agreements with public employees.

The decision by Circuit Court Judge Charles H. Duff upheld the right of Arlington County and 18 other state jurisdictions to make such agreements. The state had sought to ban the agreements. Gov. Mills E. Godwin Jr. said the state would appeal.

State Attorney General Andrew P. Miller's office brought the suit against Arlington in June at the request of Mr. Godwin, an outspoken foe of collective bargaining for public employees. Arlington was picked as the target of the state's test case because the county board and the county school board had negotiated agreements with five local unions representing the police, firemen, teachers, blue-collar workers and school administrators.

Messages for Yom Kippur Urge A Rededication to Moral Values

By IRVING SPIEGEL

A prominent leader of Reform Judaism has charged that some of the sciences have become a substitute for the Divine, and that they have led "to the fouling of the atmosphere, the development of more and more deadly weaponry."

In his Yom Kippur sermon Sunday night at the Stephen Wise Free Synagogue, 30 West 68th Street, Rabbi Edward E. Klein expressed concern that the "social sciences, sociology and psychology have become our gods, counting on them to generate new values for the good society."

After the chanting of the traditional Kol Nidre started the 24 hours of fasting, self evaluation, prayer and repentance, rabbis in sermons throughout the metropolitan area, called for a rededication to the meaning of the mitzvot (Biblical commandments) and intensified study of the Torah.

The 10-day period of Holy Days to mark the observance of Rosh ha-Shanah, the Jewish New Year 5737, ended at sundown

Candidate in Suffolk Says 'Pro' Bumper Stickers Are Really a 'Con' Game

ISLIP, L. I., Oct. 4 (UPI)—The bumper sticker read "For the Sake of Islip Town Keep Supervisor Cohan."

Islip Town Supervisor Peter Cohan might normally regard the stickers, despite the bad spelling, as a compliment to his administration, but he took an opposite view today since he is the Republican-Conservative candidate for Representative from Suffolk County's Second Congressional District.

At a news conference in Islip, Mr. Cohan said the stickers were "dirty tricks" played on him by campaign workers for his opponent, the incumbent Democrat, Thomas Downey.

"Downey and his aides have been working Islip Town, urging the voters to keep him in Congress because, quote 'I've done a great job as Town Supervisor and am needed at Town Hall,' Mr. Cohan said.

"I'm proud of my record, but Downey's approach is the same concept as the United States Army telling Eisenhower that he couldn't be a general because he was the best colonel they had," he added.

Buckley Urges Tax Relief Program

"The working men of New York don't want any more pie-in-the-sky government programs," he said at a news conference in the Franklitch Tavern in Lackawanna.

Mr. Buckley, the Conservative-Republican candidate for re-election, also continued to call Daniel P. Moynihan, his Democratic-Liberal opponent, "Professor," a title that accurately describes Mr. Moynihan's status at Harvard University but that is used by Mr. Buckley to imply a sort of academic fuzziness.

"My opponent favors the notoriously wasteful and expensive Humphrey-Hawkins bill, he said. 'I say the good professor should be returned to Harvard, where his academic theories can't do much harm.'" yesterday with Yom Kippur, the Day of Atonement.

Rabbi Emanuel Rackman, spiritual leader of the Fifth Avenue Synagogue, 5 East 62d Street, cited the rescue of Israelis in Uganda from terrorists who had hijacked a French jetliner, saying it had raised the morale of Jews the world over.

However, Rabbi Rackman said, the Jewish people "must cultivate a commitment to their ancestral heritage and their still unfulfilled purpose as a singular group, with such dramatic, climactic events."

"Jews," he said, "must become more Jewish, not by shock treatments but by depth therapy, Jewish education and inspirational Jewish living."

Rabbi Walter S. Wurzbarger, president of the Rabbinical Council of America, in his sermon before Congregation Shaaray Tefila, 55 Central Avenue, Far Rockaway, Queens, urged the American electorate to avoid "any traces of religious bigotry and to display a sense of responsibility to the moral principles which provide the foundation of the democratic process."

"This Yom Kippur season," he said, "should inspire in the minds of all Americans a desire to raise ever higher the moral and spiritual values of a vibrant and creative democracy."

Crime Is Condemned
Dr. Gershon Cohen, chancellor of the Jewish Theological Seminary of America, Broadway and 122d Street, in his sermon, said that politicians "must abandon the pretense that youthful offenders are entitled to immunities that derive from a time when youthful crimes were minor offenses."

Dr. Cohen, who heads Conservative Judaism's major institution, said that politicians "must abandon the pretense that youthful offenders are entitled to immunities that derive from a time when youthful crimes were minor offenses."

Dr. Cohen said "we must proclaim aloud that we cannot live, study, create in a community where rape, murder, robbery, and the miscarriage of justice—four of the cardinal sins—are flaunted."

Rabbi Menachem Schneerson, spiritual leader of the Lubavitch Movement, in his sermon at 770 Eastern Parkway before some 2,000 Hasidic Jews and guests, called on Jews the world over "to relate to each other through acts of kindness, charity giving and devotion to every phase of Judaism."

Body of Girl, 17, Who Vanished In July Is Found; 2 Suspects Held

JOHNSTOWN, N.Y., Oct. 4 (UPI)—Two men were held without bail in Fulton County Jail today on charges of having kidnaped a teen-aged girl whose body was found during the weekend.

The suspects, Francis Arnold, 23 years old, and Lawrence Warren, 25, both of Gloversville, N.Y., were arrested yesterday. The state police said other arrests were expected, but refused to say why homicide charges had not been lodged against the two suspects.

The body of the victim, 17-year-old Cecelia Genatiempo of Gloversville, was found by hunters in neighboring Montgomery County on Saturday morning.

She had been reported missing last July 25, when she was believed to have runaway from home.

is her campaign role? "I press his pants a lot," she says. But staff workers say that she not only serves as a conduit for some of the idea people, but also has caused some changes (no one will say precisely what) both in scheduling her husband's time and in the tenor of the advertising campaign.

But the initial decisions were primarily technical and almost totally Mr. Crangle's.

The compilation began with Mr. Crangle's assessment of the political situation. Mr. Moynihan was perceived as a neo-conservative of sorts, so the campaign had best be headed by someone with "real liberal credentials."

There was, Mr. Crangle told the candidate, "a bright young fellow in Albany" who met that ideological test. That was Mr. Frucher.

They met, got along and Mr. Frucher, who grew up in Jersey City and was Goldberg-for-Governor press secretary, was hired. He took over much of the staffing responsibility, consulting Mr. Crangle only on major appointments.

When Mr. Crangle tried to get Mr. Moynihan to change his mind and run, he had brought in people who would play significant campaign roles. His guest list at a dinner at the Carlisle Hotel, where he pressed the twin arguments that "the party was being Manhattanized" and that a successful candidate could not be "afraid of a fight," was: Pat and Liz Moynihan; Richard Ravitch, builder, appointed rescuer of the Urban Development Corporation, Democratic fund raiser and a friend of Mr. Moynihan's; and Chester Straub, lawyer, former State Senator and Mr. Crangle's one-time Albany roommate.

Mr. Ravitch is helping now with fund raising. Mr. Straub is the campaign lawyer.

"You got my Irish up," Mr. Moynihan said after the Crangle challenge at dinner. But he was still concerned about labor support and the need to win the 25 percent vote of the Democratic State Committee, which would put him on the primary-election ballot without the pestiness of circulating petitions.

"I called Al Barkun [chairman of the Committee on Political Education for the national A.F.L.-C.I.O.] and Barkun called him," Mr. Crangle said. His role as a leader of the Humphrey-for-President campaign ended by the campaign's collapse. Mr. Crangle was back working full-time on Moynihan-for-Senator and the 25 percent was his problem—successfully handled, as it turned out.

Mr. Frucher meanwhile was "trying to assess where we were—basically we had a bunch of people who had worked on the Jackson-for-President campaign or just walked in off the street because they heard Pat was running."

"I started on advance, scheduling, media—the very basic things," he said.

"I telephoned some friends—politicians and reporters—and heard that Mo Udall's press guy, Dick Stout, would be available when the Udall-for-President campaign ended. I knew him from my work on the McCarthy campaign—he was a reporter covering it, and he wrote a book about it, and he treated me very nicely in it. He said he had to fulfill his commitment to Udall through the Democratic convention, but he could come aboard then."

"I called Carmine Parisi about advance work. He said, 'No, I can't. But I think Jim Levy's available.'"

"Easier With a Tall Guy"

Mr. Levy, who did the same sort of thing for John V. Lindsay, signed on and likes his job heading the staff that clears the way for the candidate's public appearances. He looked cheerfully one day at his candidate, towering above a medium-sized crowd of autograph seekers. "It's always easier with a tall guy," Mr. Levy said.

In his role as outspoken American Representative to the United Nations, Mr. Moynihan stirred some animosity and, as he went through his checklist, it occurred to Mr. Frucher that it might be well to hire a driver who could double as a security man.

"I telephoned the Patrolmen's Benevolent Association to see if there were any laid-off city policemen available, Chuck Russell answered the phone. We talked and, as it turned out, we signed him up for the job himself."

Scheduling, "Joe Crangle got to know Jeff Weiss on the Humphrey campaign. He asked me to give him a buzz. I already knew him from when he worked for Al Lowenstein's Congressional campaign on Long Island, and I had gone out, as a friend, to help Al."

polling. "Mike DeGuidice [who works for Assembly Speaker Stanley Steingut] referred me to Dick Dressner. He combines polling and media. You know, you match the poll results to the media buy."

Mr. Crangle took a personal role in this. "I sat down with him," he said, "because this was a most important part of the campaign."

Media. "I knew one of the worst things you could do was get an ad agency," said Mr. Crangle, "because you pay an impossible price." Tony Schwartz, who mixes tapes and pictures and various electronic gadgetry in a cellar on the West Side of Manhattan, was hired.

"We checked half a dozen media people," said Mr. Frucher. "Tony's stuff was the best."

Research. From his teaching and writing contacts, the candidate brought his own staff, Suzy Weaver, who once was his teaching assistant, came on to head the research into what the outspoken and relentlessly writing Mr. Moynihan had put on the record and might want to add to it. She went back to three-day-a-week teaching at Yale, and because she was working only part-time on the campaign, Marc Platner took a leave as research associate at the 20th Century Fund and came in as campaign research director.

The spillover from Mr. Moynihan's life, as an academic and parent in the research contributed to the "a page" that is something to the nuts-and-bolts of Mrs. Moynihan, a sort met her husband worked on the Harris campaign, seemed to outsiders could tell, a ternal squabble that is a time of wholesale campaign team.

She felt that the fact overscheduling her husband to take his car doses, interspersed with time to do his own work some cutbacks.

And she has function campaign staffers, are often strong, opinionated friends from the academy.

The key figures in campaign are Mrs. Moynihan and Mr. Podhorz, who has often been a Senate candidate in Ravitch.

Mr. Podhorz, a 1 han friend, serves as intellectual, who serves talks weighty issues the candidate. The twar moderately liberal state of the nation and Mr. Garmen, one of Nixon aides who served with his reputation involved in operations often serves as a go-campaign staff when, angry over some debt take.

Mr. Ravitch and Mr provided access for labor, the Liberal Party and potential contribution also serves as a candidate.

A recipe for success another month to similar on Nov. 2.

Slim your body and relax your mind with Meditation!

YOU CAN MASTER MEDITATION IN 30 MINUTES IN THE PRIVACY OF YOUR OWN HOME

Meditation is not a new concept. Thousands of years ago the ancient Sages of Tibet were capable of meditating on hot coals without pain, by using mental concentration. Christ taught us that the Kingdom of God is within. Freud showed us the amazing powers of our subconscious mind. Now you can get the tremendous psychological and physiological benefits of meditation in 30 minutes in the privacy of your own home and shape up your mind and your body!

GET THE BENEFITS OF MEDITATION QUICKLY

Many of us don't relate to the concept of a guru or master, or the requirements to leave our homes for lengthy courses, while spending hundreds of dollars. But all of us—men and women—are seeking the ability to achieve deep relaxation, peace of mind, a complete release from hypertension, and to get our bodies in shape. Steven West, President of American Association of Applied Psychology, has simplified meditation techniques so that you can get the benefits of meditation in 30 minutes in the privacy of your own home. Simply stated, what Steven West has done is to give you the shortest and most effective route to all the benefits of meditation in his book called Mental-Calisthenics.

THIS IS A PRACTICAL BOOK

As you begin to practice meditation, there will be fewer times when you find yourself scratching your head and trying to figure out why a situation you thought you had under control, or a person you thought you understood, disappointed you. If you are expecting an intellectual dissertation, forget it! Meditation has been endorsed by the leaders of all religions but it is not a substitute for religion.

AFTER THE FIRST EVENING YOU CAN EXPERIENCE THESE HEALTH BENEFITS

1. If you are now overweight, Meditation may help you lose weight, not only by controlling your appetite, but by removing the stress and tension that cause you to overeat in the first place.
2. Cigarette smoking and other bad habits such as excessive drinking have even been cured within one month with the use of MENTAL-CALISTHENICS Meditation.
3. If you presently suffer from constant fatigue and exhaustion and run out of gas every afternoon, you may acquire heightened energy levels, endurance, vim and vigor.
4. Men and women who suffer from depression and deep melancholia will find they can overcome these moods, find peace and happiness.
5. Sufferers of migraine headaches and high blood pressure caused by stress conditions have often been helped by regular Meditation.

AND EXPERIENCE THESE ADDITIONAL BENEFITS

- You will reduce those sleepless nights and unnecessary arguments that sometimes make you feel like you are losing control.
- You can clear away the years' accumulations of tension and confusion.
- Obtain a sense of greater relaxation and confidence will assist you in improving your romantic and sexual life.
- You will learn how to achieve peace of mind permanently and acquire invulnerability to outside stress and strains.
- You will get rid of the failure habits that are holding you back in life, keeping you poorer than you should be, such as laziness and procrastination.
- You can use Meditation to overcome personal problems such as an inferiority complex, self-consciousness, fear of inadequacy, and instead build a strong, self-reliant, vibrant personality.

Yanks, Winners on Field, Narrow Mets' Lead in TV Ratings Game

Although the New York Yankees were winners this season and achieved two million in attendance at Yankee Stadium for the first time since 1950, the New York Mets, who had a disappointing season, continued to outdraw the American League team on television.

For 121 televised games, the Mets had an average on WOR-TV of 7.6. The Yankees, for 88 televised games, averaged a 6.1 rating for the season on WPIX-TV.

However, the ratings for the Mets were down from a 9.2 average last year, while the Yankees improved from a 5.8 average in drawing their largest television audience in seven years.

As home station for the Yankees, WPIX will carry the playoff games, scheduled to begin next Saturday, simultaneously with ABC-TV, which has the national rights.

For the playoff games in Yankee Stadium, WPIX will produce its own telecast. For the remainder, it will use the ABC picture, but will originate its own audio.

Should the Yankees advance to the World Series, WPIX will carry those games, but is required under its contract to use the telecast provided by NBC-TV.

PBS Aids Those With Poor Hearing

The Public Broadcasting Service, pursuing its experiments with captioned programs for those with poor hearing, has provided 18 schools around the country—including the Lexington School for the Deaf in Jackson Heights, Queens—with special decoders that make captions appear on the screen for certain programs.

The primary vehicle for the project will be the children's series from Britain, "Once Upon a Classic," which will begin on PBS Sunday with a six-part dramatization of "The Prince and the Pauper." The programs are to be encoded with what are called "closed" captions—subtitles that are invisible on all television sets except those specially equipped to make them appear.

The 18 decoders in the schools are prototype models that are not yet being manufactured for the general market, because the Federal Communications Commission has not yet authorized the PBS closed-caption system for permanent use.

Until the system receives authorization, PBS is able to use it on about two hours of programming a week, on a test basis.

Under the system developed at PBS, which grew out of separate experiments by Hazeltine Research Inc. and the National Bureau of Standards in 1972, the encoded written material is transmitted at the same time as the television picture, but on a nonvisual part of the screen, known as Line 21.

The decoder removes the captions from the nonvisual area and superimposes them on the television picture.

Woman Excused From Saxe Jury Is Accused of Gambling in Boston

BOSTON, Oct. 4 (AP)—A 24-year-old woman excused last week as a juror in Susan Saxe's trial on charges of murder and armed robbery was arraigned today in the same courthouse on gambling charges.

Debra A. Fuller of the South End section of Boston pleaded not guilty of being present where gaming implements were found. She was arrested yesterday in a raid on an apartment near her home. Miss Fuller was dismissed from the Saxe jury last Tuesday after a meeting between Chief Justice Walter H. McLaughlin of the Superior Court, who is trying the Saxe case, and lawyers for the prosecution and defense.

The meeting was reportedly the result of an anonymous telephone call to the district attorney's office.

TV: Crusty 'Harry S. Truman: Plain Speaking'

By JOHN J. O'CONNOR

The speaker is no crackpot on a street corner soapbox. He is Harry S. Truman, addressing his colleagues in the Senate in December 1937: "We worship money instead of honor. A billionaire, in our estimation, is much greater in the eyes of the people than the public servants who work for the public interest. It makes no difference if the billionaire rode to wealth on the sweat of little children and the blood of underpaid labor. We do not recognize the Carnegie Libraries steeped in the blood of the Homestead steel workers, but they are. We do not remember that the Rockefeller Foundation is founded on the dead miners of the Colorado Fuel Company. We worship Mammon."

This glimpse of a future President is used as the tone-setting preface for "Harry S. Truman: Plain Speaking," which can be seen on public television at 9 o'clock this evening. Adapted from the best-selling book by Merle Miller, Carol Sobieski's script collates Mr. Truman's own comments and observations into a remarkable one-man portrait brilliantly performed by Ed Flanders. The words were recorded in 1963 during the course of an unsuccessful attempt to get a 13-hour biography of the 68-year-old former President on television. The producer of that project and this dramatization is David Susskind. His research/writer nearly 14 years ago was Merle Miller. Directed by Daniel Petrie, "Harry S.

Truman: Plain Speaking" is, in many ways, extraordinary television. Unlike "Give 'em Hell, Harry," the recent one-man production starring James Whitmore, it avoids easy theatrics. Mr. Flanders' performance, buttressed with make-up by Dick Smith, carefully avoids cheap flamboyance and focuses on the understated, almost inhibited mannerisms of a man wholly unafraid to express himself in the bluntest terms possible.

There is "movement" in the dramatization. Except for a brief and vigorous walk outdoors, the actor is limited to two basic settings resembling Mr. Truman's home library and the Oval Office at the White House. He sits at a piano to play for a few moments, or uses framed photographs as props to recall people being discussed. But the dramatic center of the portrait is in Mr. Truman's words.

Those words retain unusual clout, enough to create formidable difficulties for this production on its way to presentation on television. The language is described as salty. And Mr. Truman is characteristically candid in his opinions, casually tackling figures such as Richard Nixon, the Kennedys, Dwight Eisenhower, Chiang Kai-shek and Douglas MacArthur. But even his most ardent detractors might be disarmed by Mr. Truman's blunt honesty in dealing with himself and others. Some of his decisions can be criticized or perhaps condoned, but the man himself is admirable in his typical American crustiness. He avoided the cosmetic manipulations of professional image makers. He addressed himself directly to the "common people" and, as he put it, "I didn't say anything fancy or put on any paint or powder."

From the beginning he identified with the "underdog" and waged battle against "the high hats" and "the stuffed shirts, the counterfeiters and fellows on Madison Avenue." He conceded to only two serious mistakes during his Presidency: Appointing Tom Clark to the Supreme Court (he was "not bad, just a dumb S.O.B.") and the setting up of the Central Intelligence Agency ("secrecy and democracy just don't mix").

For all of his inability to dissemble, Harry S. Truman was a complicated and fascinating man. This television portrait, produced by Talent Associates in association with Pittsburgh station WQED, does him full and rewarding justice.

Producer Is Sure There Won't Be Silent Moments in Second Debate

SAAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 4 (UPI)—There will be no repetition of the silence that halted the first confrontation between Gerald R. Ford and Jimmy Carter for 27 minutes, according to Jack Kelly, CBS producer in charge of Wednesday night's debate. He said yesterday that he had no doubt that the debate at the Palace of Fine Arts Theater would come off without a technical hitch.

About 100 technicians, production aides and telephone men installed nine cameras, including one spare, on the stage. Mr. Kelly said there was one complete system designed to transmit the debate around the world and an emergency backup system.

Mr. Kelly said he understood that Mr. Carter would inspect the site Tuesday but had not been told when the President would visit the theater.

"...our parents lived to work, we work to live."

"For dad, being away from work was harder than being at work.

Even when he was on vacation.

Because to our parents, working was a way of life.

For us, it's a way to life.

A way to experience new places. New people. New ideas.

Now don't get us wrong, we enjoy working. It's just that we enjoy the rewards of work even more.

Experimenting with new hobbies.

Just making every day count.

You see we know what we want from life.

And when you know that, you don't have to wait for tomorrow to live the good life.

You live it today."

The way Warren and Judy feel about work is an example of the new values many young adults share today.

And because Psychology Today responds to those values, it attracts over four and a half million people every month.

People who believe in living their dreams today, not tomorrow.

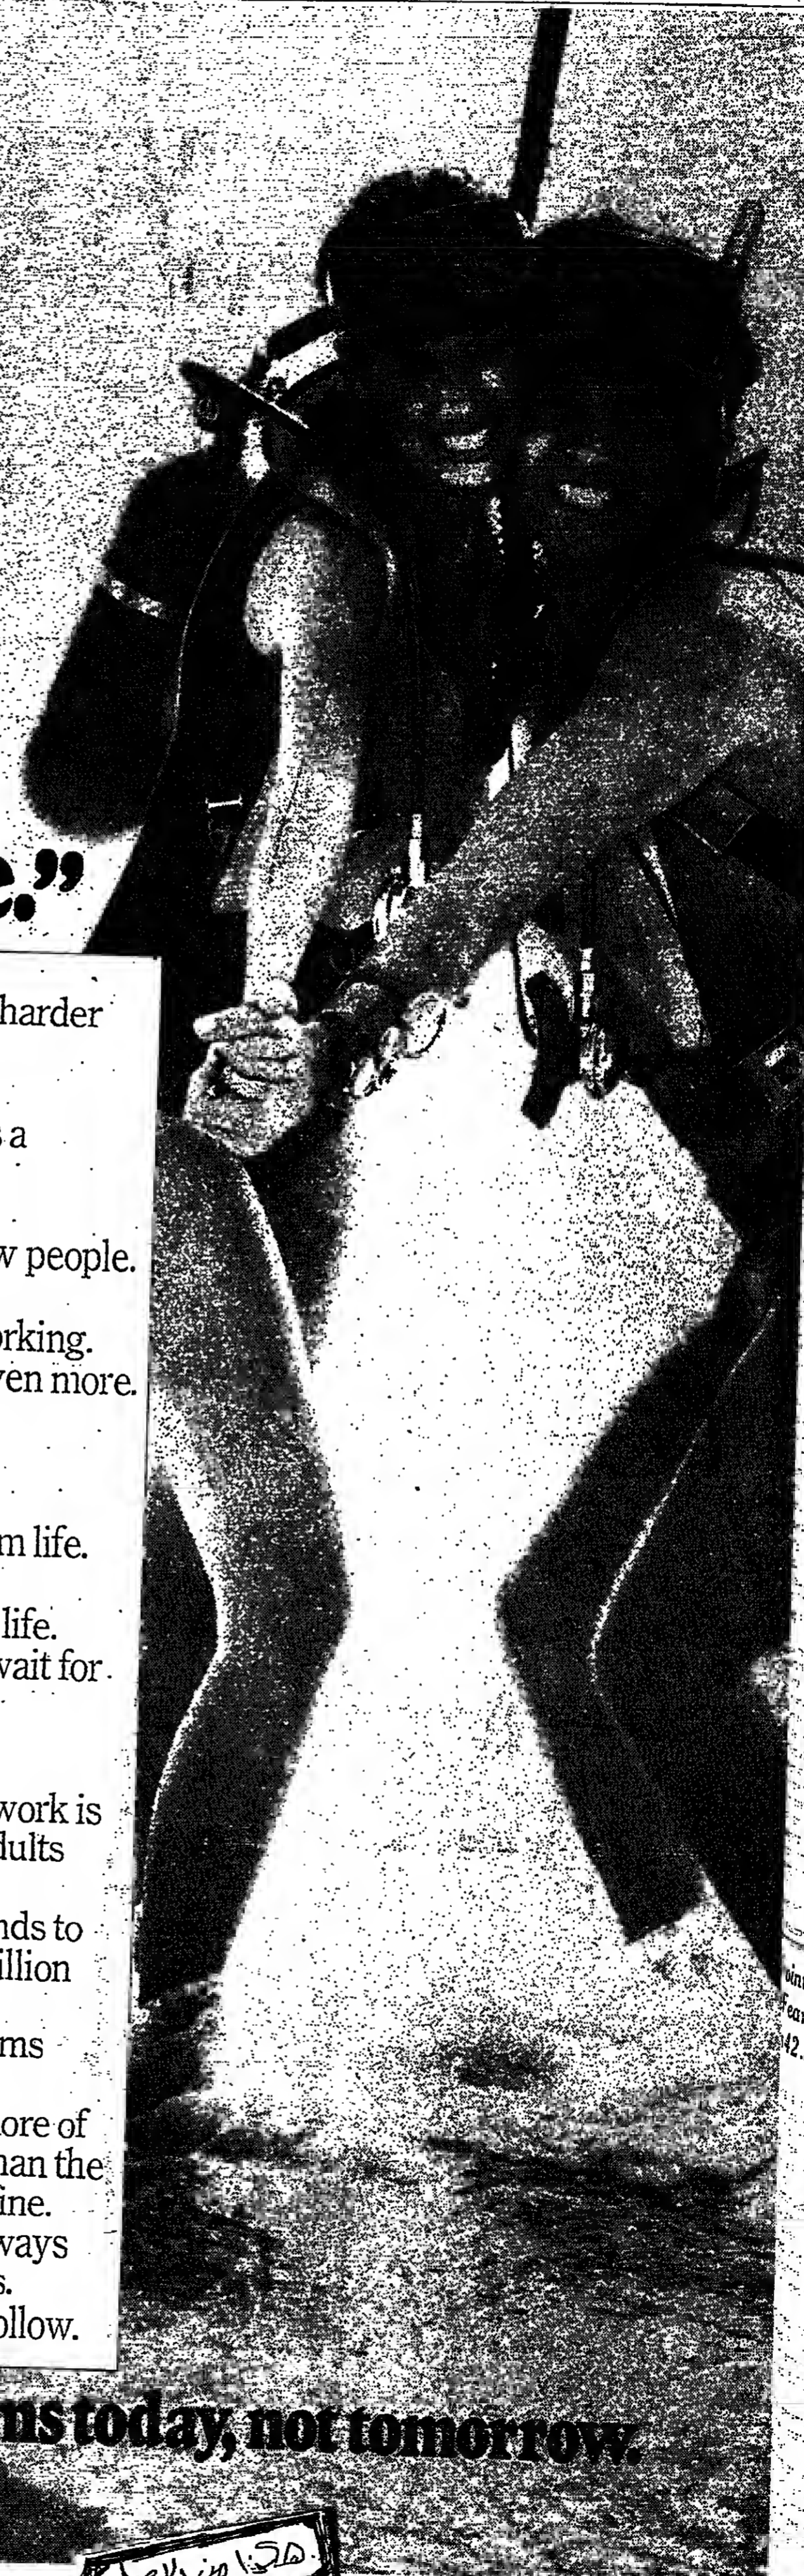

For example, according to Simmons, more of PT's readers travel, own a car and entertain, than the readers of just about every other major magazine.

And PT readers set the trends others follow.
